would seem to be untenable to say that the mere inclusion in a lease of a covenant to improve and repair on the part of the lessee will create the relation of agency between the tenant and the landlord, especially where the tenant is to do the work at his own expense and is expressly denied any authority to bind the landlord."

Philip Gruner, etc. Lumber Co. v. Nelson, supra, holds that the fee of the lessor is bound by the lien based upon an improvement made by the lessee pursuant to a covenant in the lease. This case, together with the other Missouri cases and certain Illinois cases, in which very broad language was likewise used, are reviewed and explained in Dierks, etc. Lumber Co. v. Morris, supra, pp. 219-222, as follows:

"Passing to our decision, we find that every one of [585] them, which hold that the fee is bound by the lien, do so only after examining the facts to see whether or not the lessee is in fact doing the work for the lessor, or whether the improvement is for the present or immediate benefit of the reversionary or freehold interest.

"In the cases of Dougherty-Moss Lumber Co. v. Churchill, 114 Mo. App. 578, 90 S. W. 405, and Curtin-Clark Hardware Co. v. Churchill, 126 Mo. App. 462, 104 S. W. 476, the lessee was bound to change a hotel into a theater at an expense of $20,000 and the property became the lessor's at the end of ten years. Besides, the lessor obligated the lessee to build and placed no restriction on his authority to bind with a lien. And the court held that presumptively the lessor made the lessee his agent to bind the whole property for the improvements. But in the case now before us the clause saying the lessee shall have no such authority takes away any such presumption.

"In the case of Winslow Bros. Co. v. McCully Stone Mason Co. 169 Mo. 236, 69 S. W. 304, the court bound the freehold interest because the evidence showed that the owner of the fee was really having the work done by the lessee as a mere straw man. On page 248 the court says the lessee was in reality the alter ego of the lessor, the Van Raake Investment Company. And on page 244 the court says the mere fact 'that the tenant has contracted with the owners to make certain improvements on the leased premises, does not make the land or the landlord's interest in the land subject to a mechanic's lien. For in such cases the tenant acts for himself and is not the agent of the owner.' In this case also the court held that it was proper to instruct the jury that if it was the intention, purpose and understanding between the fee owner and the lessee that the latter should complete the building for the immediate use, enjoyment and benefit of the lessor, and it was completed in pursuance to that understanding, then plaintiff was entitled to a lien against the fee.

"In Crandall v. Sorg, 198 Ill. 48, 64 N. E. 769, the [586] lessor was jointly interested with the lessee in erecting the improvements which were to cost $300,000 while the price of the lot on which they were erected was a much smaller sum. The court held that the defendant Sorg was not an ordinary lessor but was actively engaged in erecting the building, and did not provide that the lessee should have no authority to bind his interest with a lien, but merely contented himself with a stipulation that if any liens were created the lessee would pay them and hold him harmless.

"The case of Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Jones, 187 Ill. 203, 58 N. E. 347, was decided under a statute of that State which authorized a lien against a lessor's freehold if the latter 'authorized or knowingly permitted' the lessee to improve the premises, a statute vastly different from ours. In addition to the statute in that case the court held that by the terms of the lease the right of the lessee to create a lien was recognized and a provision for forfeiture was made in case any were created. Furthermore, the improvements consisted of a building to cost not less than $6000 and the lease was for only five years with privilege of the lessor to terminate sooner and the lessor had in fact terminated the lease and the lessor was insolvent.

"We have carefully gone through all of the cases cited by appellant and find that in all of them there is either a statute which by its peculiar terms authorizes a lien against the freehold without reference to the question of agency, or the facts were such as to make the owner of the freehold directly responsible for the improvements.

"On the other hand the principle is laid down that a provision in a lease expressly requiring the lessee to make specified improvements or repairs does not make the lessee, in so doing, the agent of the lessor so as to bind the reversion of the lessor with a mechanic's lien therefor. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 319; Cornell v. Barney, 94 N. Y. 394; Rothe v. Bellingrath, 71 [587] Ala. 55; Morrow v. Merritt, 16 Utah 412, 52 Pac. 667. It is true the text says there are decisions to the contrary, but those contrary decisions without exception, in the facts stated, show either a participation by the lessor in the building in addition to the mere covenant in the lease, thus making the lessee actually the agent of the owner to erect the building, or that the case was decided under statutes which so defined the word agent as to bring the persons ordering the improvements within the meaning of that term."

Measuring the facts of this case by the law so ascertained, it is manifest that the judgment of the trial court is right, as the liens claimed may not be sustained under the provisions of § 4025 as affected by § 4027. The lessors neither participated in the erection or construction of the improvement nor approved the plans therefor. They had nothing to say as to the size and architecture of the building or the material of which it should be built. While it was to cost not less than a substantial, designated sum, there is no allegation nor showing that the rents reserved were greater than the reasonable worth of the vacant lots upon which the improvements were to be constructed. If the improvements increased the value of the freehold interest, it was not primarily so but only as a future incident thereto, and the owner of the fee was not the owner of the building or structure within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law. He would become such owner only by operation of law through the expiration or termination of the lease, or at least only when the building was "commenced and completed," when, by the language of the lease, and not until then, it would become a part of the realty of the lessors.

However, should we assume that presumptively the lessors made the lessee their agent by reason of the covenant to build and certain other conditions in the lease, the clause therein expressly denying to the lessee the right and power to charge any lien or incumbrance of [588] any kind against the lessors or their estate, nullifies and renders non-effective such presumption. When a lease provides that the lessee shall erect a building on the premises and is silent as to the authority or want of authority of the lessee to subject the lessor's interest to a mechanic's lien, it is only by implication that it can be held that such authority exists. No such implication can arise in this case for the lease expressly denies to the lessee the authority to do anything with the premises that would bind the interest of the lessors therein with a mechanic's lien. The laws of this state do not prohibit or render non-effective a contract so limiting the power of a lessee, and it is unnecessary to inquire into the constitutionality of a law that should attempt to prohibit such contracts when the public health, safety, morals and welfare are in no wise involved. The power to contract with reference to one's property is a valuable right and courts should and will construe statutes as not abridging that right, when possible, in order to preserve the constitutionality of the law. Moreover, as a lease of real property is an instrument which, under the law may be recorded and thereupon constitutes constructive notice to those subsequently acquiring an interest in the premises, the rights and authority of the parties thereto and whatever agency it might be presumed was created thereby to deal with the estate, or the interest of either of such parties therein, is necessarily subject to the conditions and limitations expressed in the instrument creating the agency, unless otherwise provided by law. §§ 694, 707, Rev. Stat. 1908; Perkins v. Adams, 16 Colo. App. 96, 100, 63 Pac. 792; Delta County Land, etc. Co. v. Talcott, 17 Colo. App. 316, 321, 68 Pac. 985; Loser v. Plainfield Savings Bank, 149 Ia. 672, 126 N. W. 1101, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1112.

Thus, in Cornell v. Barney, supra, it was held that when the lease was recorded and permanent improvements constructed on the leased premises by the lessee [589] under a covenant in the lease obligating him to do so, lien claimants for such work were chargeable with notice of all the terms contained in the lease. And in Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. Main Line Realty Co. supra, upon the effect of the record of a lease, it is said: "It is true, as argued, that the contract of lease required the building to be erected; but it was to be erected by the lessee and the lessee alone and at its cost. The lease was of record and the appellants must be charged with notice of its contents."

Plaintiffs in error, however, contend that as the clause withholding from, and denying to, the lessee the power to charge the interest of the lessors with any mechanic's lien or incumbrances of any kind, contains a covenant upon the part of the lessee that "it will not permit or suffer any bill of any mechanic, labor or material man to be or remain unpaid," and requires the lessee, before commencing the erection and construction of the building, to furnish a bond satisfactory to the lessors guaranteeing the due observance of the clause, that thereby the contract recognizes that such liens might accrue, be filed, and be binding against the interest of the lessors. We do not concur in this view. On the contrary, we do not think it changes in any manner the meaning of that part of the clause which limits the authority of the lessee in the premises. The lessors were certainly interested in having all bills paid to the end that the lessee's interest in the premises be not subjected to a mechanic's lien and a new tenancy created by operation of law through the enforced assignment of the lease. And this is clearly the purpose of the requirement in that respect.

It is not conceivable that the legislature made provision, as it did by § 4029, supra, whereby an owner could protect his interest in land against mechanics' liens for improvements made thereon with his knowledge but in relation to which he had not contracted, and made like provision by § 4025, supra, whereby he could, when [590] entering into a certain class of contracts, that is, with a contractor or builder, limit to such contract price the lien liability of his land, and intended, as to all other contracts relative to improvements upon land, that an owner's rights in the premises and the liabilities that might be impressed thereon as a lien, could in no wise be protected and limited. Such a legislative enactment, if not unconstitutional, would be, at least, unjust and inequitable. We cannot sanction a rule of law, unless by legislative enactment we are so required to do, whereby one man's property may be taken for the debts of another and such person be without power to prevent it. We, therefore, withdraw the former opinion filed herein and affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Judgment affirmed.

Decision en banc.

Hill and Scott, JJ., dissent.

MUSSEY, C. J. (specially concurring).—I agree that the judgment should be affirmed, but I rest my conclusion solely upon clause six of the lease, which is as follows:

"It is expressly understood and agreed (and notice is hereby given), that nothing herein shall authorize the lessee or any person dealing through, with or under it to charge said lands, or any interest of the lessors therein, or this lease, with any mechanic's lien, or lien or incumbrance of any kind whatever. On the contrary (and notice is hereby given), the right and power to charge any lien or incumbrance of any kind against the lessors, or their estate, is hereby expressly denied, and the lessee covenants that it will not permit or suffer any bill of any mechanic, labor or material man, or for any furnishings or equipments of said premises, to be or remain unpaid. The lessee shall, before commencing the erection and construction of a building on said premises, furnish [591] or cause to be furnished a bond in a bonding company satisfactory to lessors, guaranteeing the due observance of this clause 6."

If a mechanic's lien can be fastened upon the reversionary interest of the lessors it must be that the lease made the lessee the agent of the lessors with authority to so contract with reference to the erection of the contemplated building as to bind the interest of the lessors. The agency, if any, that existed between the lessors and lessees was created by the lease. Plainly that agency did not arise from that part of Sec. 4025 Rev. St. '08, which says that "every contractor, architect, engineer, subcontractor, builder, agent or other person having charge of the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building or other improvement as aforesaid, shall be held to be the agent of the owner for the purposes of this act." The lessee was not one of those enumerated in the statute who was to be deemed the agent of the owner for the purposes of the act unless the lease created such agency. If the lessee was at all the agent it was by virtue of the lease and not of the statute. It is elementary that the authority of an agent is limited and controlled by the instrument creating the agency and that any person dealing with an agent, and having knowledge of the limitations upon the latter's authority, must at his peril contract with the agent within the known limits of that authority. When a lease provides that the lessee shall erect a building on the real estate and is silent as to the authority or want of authority of the lessee to bind the lessor's interest with a mechanic's lien, it is only by implication, if at all, that it can be said that such authority exists. No such implication can be made in this case, for clause six of the lease, expressly and plainly, in words that need no other construction than their obvious meaning denotes, withholds from and denies to the lessee the authority to bind the interest of [592] the lessors with a mechanic's lien. There is no escape from this. The part of the clause which provides that the lessee would "not permit or suffer any bill of any mechanic, labor or material man, or for any furnishings or equipments of said premises, to be or remain unpaid," is only a personal covenant; that is, one that extends only to the lessors and lessees. Under the lease, a lien would attach to the leasehold interest of the lessee in the premises, and the lessors were interested in seeing that the bills for labor and material were paid. The part of the clause before that withholds from the lessee any and all authority to encumber the lessor's interest with a lien. Nor does the sentence of the clause which provides that the lessee shall furnish a bond guaranteeing the due observance of the provisions of the clause in any manner change the meaning of that part of the clause which limits the authority of the lessee. The lessors were certainly interested in having the provisions of the lease carried out and they had the right to exact a bond guaranteeing such consummation. Any contractor, subcontractor, material man or laborer who would read this clause of the lease could obtain therefrom no other idea than that it was the intention of the contracting parties, the lessors and the lessee, that the interest of the lessors should not be subject to mechanics' liens in consequence of the erection of the building contemplated in the lease.

When the intention of the parties to a contract is found in a contract then it is known what the contract is. What the parties intended by clause six is obvious and plain. If the contract that the interest of the lessors should not be subject to a mechanic's lien is valid then these plaintiffs in error were not entitled to a lien against the interest of the lessors and the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed. In order that it may be said that the plaintiffs in error had a right to mechanics' liens on the interest of the lessors it must be held that that part of the lease forbidding such a lien is void and without [593] effect; and then it must be implied (for there are no express provisions in the lease to that effect) that the lessee was the agent of the lessors with authority to encumber the interest of the latter with a lien. In order to reach that holding and implication it must be held first, that the mechanics' lien laws of this state prohibit such a contract between the lessor and lessee, and second, that it was within the constitutional authority of the legislature to prohibit such a contract when the public health, safety, morals and welfare were in no way involved. The lien laws of this state do not prohibit or render ineffective such a contract between a lessor and lessee, hence it is not at all necessary to inquire into the constitutionality of a law that should attempt to do so. The power to contract with reference to one's property when such a contract does not affect the public health, safety, morals or welfare (which matters are under the recognized cognizance of the legislature) is a very important right, and if it can be done, courts will construe statutes as not abridging that right so as to preserve the constitutionality of the law. In Illinois, it has been held that the right to so contract is clearly a property right and if the legislature should pass a statute prohibiting or restraining an owner and contractor from agreeing that the building should be relieved of liens, that such a statute would be unconstitutional.—Kelly v. Johnson, 251 Ill. 135, 95 N. E. 1068, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573; Cameron-Schroth-Cameron Co. v. Geseke, 251 Ill. 402, 96 N. E. 222.

While I do not express any opinion as to the constitutionality of such a statute, it seems to me that the Illinois cases, and all other authorities are to the effect that the right to contract with reference to one's property is a property right. To say that a person cannot lease his property upon such terms and conditions as he may choose, is to restrain him of full dominion over his property, and certainly any law which so restrains him beyond matters which effect the public health, safety, [594] morals or welfare, must do so expressly or by necessary implication, even if it may be constitutional. If such a law is constitutional at all it must come from the legislature and not from the courts. Our Mechanics' Lien Act provides that its provisions shall be liberally construed in order that its purposes may be achieved, but this refers to a liberal construction of what is in the act. It does not mean that the courts, in order that a person may have a mechanic's lien, have authority to drag into the act that which is not there, nor to disregard elementary principles of law, nor by unnecessary implication or doubtful construction lessen that dominion over his property to which an owner is entitled. Sec. 4033 provides that "no agreement to waive, abandon or refrain from enforcing any lien provided for by this act shall be binding except as between the parties to such contract." That section cannot be applied here, for an agreement to waive, abandon or refrain from enforcing a lien must be made by a party entitled to a lien; that is, by a contractor, subcontractor, material man or laborer. There is no such a contract in this case. Sec. 4029 provides that any building, etc., constructed upon any land, with the knowledge of the owner, shall be held to have been erected at the instance and request of such owner, so far as to subject his interest to a lien, unless the owner shall, within five days after he shall have obtained notice of the construction, give notice in a certain manner that his interest shall not be subject to a lien, provided that the provisions of the section shall not apply to any owner who shall have contracted for such erection. Plaintiffs in error contend that because the notice prescribed was not given, the liens attached to the lessors' interest. Assume, for the sake of the argument, that the section would apply in the absence of any notice. That section must contemplate an owner who has not already, in some effectual way, given notice that his interest will not be subject to a lien. Certainly the legislature did not have [595] in mind that a person who had already given notice should give additional notice in a certain manner. Nor does the section say expressly, or by necessary or any implication, that a lessor who has already contracted with a lessee, in a manner of which the world must take notice, that the interest of the lessor shall not be subject to a lien, must nevertheless give further notice, as prescribed by the statute, in order that his property shall be free from a lien. Nor can it be reasonably said that the legislature intended that one who already has ample notice from a lessor that the latter's interest shall not be subject to a lien, shall nevertheless be given further notice of that fact in the particular manner prescribed in the section before he can be deprived of a lien. Such additional notice would be needless to one already notified and to say that, because it was not given in the particular manner prescribed in the statute, one who already knows of the fact to be imparted shall nevertheless have a lien, would be somewhat arbitrary to say the least.

Mechanics' lien laws can be sustained only upon the theory that the lien is engrained upon the interest of the owner because he is consented to the improvement in such a way as to permit a lien. In order that a lien may attach, the circumstances must be such as to show consent of the owner or to justify an inference of it. Wheaton v. Berg, 50 Minn. 525, 52 N. W. 926. In order to sustain a lien for the plaintiffs in error in this case, under that section it must be taken that the consent of the lessors is conclusively presumed to have been given in such a manner as would cause their interest in the property to be subject to a lien, because they failed to give the prescribed notice. In the case last cited, the Minnesota court had under consideration a section of the lien laws of that state almost identical with Sec. 4029 of our statutes, and that court struggled manfully to reach the conclusion that the section was constitutional, [596] and in order to do so it held that the presumption that the owner had consented that a lien might attach to his interest in the premises, by failure to give the required notice was prima facie evidence that he had consented rather than conclusive, and that section prescribed a rule of evidence. The court said:

"Those who may be engaged in contributing labor or material which go to the improvement of the land may often have reason to suppose that the work is being carried on at the instance or with the consent of the landowner. It is important to such persons that, if possible, it be made known then if the owner's consent be wanting, and that, therefore, they cannot subject the property to liability for the labor or material supplied by them for its improvement. Hence the statute, in effect, makes it the duty of the owner, who knows of the improvement being made, to give the prescribed notice if he would avoid the inference that is done with his consent. From the neglect of the duty created by statute the inference follows. But it would seem to be impossible to construe this provision as making the mere neglect to give the specified notice conclusive upon the landowner in all cases. The circumstances must be such that he can comply with the statutory requirement, or he cannot be thus concluded."

It can be added with the same degree of force that the circumstances must be such that the persons interested in having a lien attach have not already received notice that the owner's interest shall not be subjected to a lien. The court further said that an owner who has knowledge of the erection of the building upon his premises may nevertheless show that he could not give the required notices and thus excuse his failure for giving them. Equally it can be said under this statute that the owner, in order to relieve his property of a lien may show that he has already given notice to that effect and that all interested did know that he had not consented [597] that his interest should be subject to liens, and that, therefore, it would be a needless thing to give the notice specified in the statute. It cannot be conclusively presumed that the lessors in this case consented that their interest might be subjected to a lien when they expressly contracted with the lessees that it should not be and gave full notice to the world of such contract before anything was done toward the erection of the building. It is to be observed that Sec. 4029 provides for actual or constructive notice at the option of the owner. It does not expressly or impliedly exclude other actual notice, which may be given, nor does it in any manner assume that other constructive notice provided by general statute or law would not be sufficient.

The Minnesota court, after showing that construing the section as conclusive against the landowner, would make it unconstitutional or of doubtful constitutionality, said:

"But some reasonable effect should be given to the statute if it be possible; and this may be done by construing the statutory presumption, which springs from the failure to give notice, as being of a prima facie nature rather than conclusive, and as imposing upon the landowner who, knowing the fact of the improvement, has failed to give the prescribed notice, the burden of relieving himself from the statutory imputation of having consented to what was being done, by proof of his inability to give the prescribed notice of his dissent, and that in fact the improvement was made without his authority or consent. As the statute was obviously intended to establish a rule of evidence, and as it cannot be sustained if the statutory presumption is to be construed as conclusive, but may be if it has the qualified effect which we have suggested, we conclude that it must be so construed. The language of the law does not forbid this construction, and there are apparent reasons which may have led the legislature to impose the burden of [598] proof on the party who has peculiar knowledge concerning the matters to which evidence is to be directed."

From what has been said, it follows that the section furnishes a rule of evidence, by which, in the first instance, the failure of an owner with knowledge to give the notice therein specified raises the presumption that the owner consented that his property be subjected to a lien, and to overcome this presumption that the owner consented that his property be subject to a lien, he must go forward with evidence to show that he could not reasonably give the notice, or that he had already effectually given actual notice, or such constructive notice as would be given by recording a lease with a provision similar to that in clause six of the present lease.

It is held in some authorities that when contracts of sale or of lease require the vendee or lessee to make improvements that the interest of the vendor or lessor will be subject to a lien when there is no stipulation to the contrary. In Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Jones, 187 Ill. 209, 58 N. E. 349, it is said:

"Similar contracts have been before the courts in proceedings to enforce mechanics' liens, and have, without exception, so far as we are advised, been held to amount to authority or consent from the owner to a vendee or lessee to make the improvements, and, in the absence of some stipulation in the agreement to the contrary, to give a lien upon the interest of the owner for materials furnished or labor performed under contracts with the vendee or lessee."

This opinion implies that in instances where the agreement contains a stipulation that the interest of the vendor or lessor shall not be subject to a lien such stipulation controls. The cases cited by plaintiffs in error as sustaining their claims to liens where all cases in which there was an absence of such stipulation in the agreement, or as in Illinois, in the case of a so-called lease, the court found that the relation between the parties [599] was in fact not that of lessor or lessee, but as joint venturers in the construction of a building. In Shapleigh v. Hull, 21 Colo. 419, 41 Pac. 1108, the owner agreed to sell land to a named vendee and the vendee agreed to erect houses on two of the lots. The contract was silent as to the right of the vendee to charge the interest of the vendor with a lien, so that there was an entire absence of any stipulation that the interest of the vendor should not be subject to a lien. It was under these circumstances that our court held that a lien would attach to the interest of a vendor. This court has not decided what the law is in the case of the presence of such a stipulation. Since, the decision in Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, sec. 4029, was passed. It was said in the Minnesota case, supra, that such a statute would permit a vendor who had made a contract similar to the one in Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, to free his property from a lien by giving the prescribed notice. If that is true, then the legislature has modified the rule of law as laid down in Shapleigh v. Hull.

On the other hand, in Wilkins v. Abell, 26 Colo. 462, 58 Pac. 612, there was a mining lease. The court said that by the demise the lessee acquired a qualified interest in the property which entitles him to work the same for his own benefit. In fact it may be said that a mining lease presupposes that the lessee will work the mine, else it would be of no use to him. In that case this court held that, "the lessee is in no sense the agent or superintendent of the lessor, nor is he a contractor in the contemplation of the statute." (Mechanics' Lien Stats.)

In Antlers Park Regent Min. Co. v. Cunningham, 29 Colo. 284, 68 Pac. 226, this court refused to decide whether or not the principle upon which Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, was decided would be applicable between a lessor and a lessee.

[600] In Williams v. Eldora-Enterprise Gold Min. Co. 35 Colo. 127, 83 Pac. 760, there was an option to purchase a mining property and a lease thereof. The lessee was required to perform a certain amount of work on the property. After showing that the possession of the claim of the lessee and the doing of the work under the lease was as lessee and not as vendee in the option this court refused to apply the doctrine announced in Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, but applied the doctrine announced in Wilkins v. Abell, supra, and said:

"Nor can a lien be asserted as against the lessor owner on the ground that the lessee here occupied some relation to the mine with respect to the working of it other than that of lessee. The contract of leasing did not call for the erection of any permanent improvements. Its only requirement of the lessee in respect to work was that it should begin development work within a certain time and continuously employ two shifts of five men each. In the nature of things, a lease of a mine contemplates that the lessee must do at least ordinary development work. A mine is valuable principally if not wholly on account of the ore it contains, and to extract the same necessarily requires work to be done upon it. The work required here was merely ordinary development work, which brings the case within the holding in Wilkins v. Abell, supra. In other words, the labor performed and materials furnished by the claimants for which a lien is sought were done for and furnished to one who was in possession and developing the same whose only relation to the property, so far as concerns any requirement of work thereon, was that of a mere lessee."

In Colorado Iron Works v. Taylor, 12 Colo. App. 451, 55 Pac. 942; Dougherty-Moss Lumber Co. v. Churchill, 114 Mo. App. 578, 90 S. W. 405, and Jones v. Menke, 168 N. Y. 61, 60 N. E. 1053, there was no stipulation that the interest of the lessor should not be subject to a lien, and [601] hence those cases are not in point here. In the case of Western Lumber, etc. Co. v. Merchants' Amusement Co. 13 Cal. App. 4, 108 Pac. 891, there was a lease, but it did not contain a stipulation forbidding a mechanic's lien on the interest of the lessor. It appeared in that case, and the court found, that the building was really erected by the lessor and that he was using the corporation lessee as an instrument to carry out his own venture. Certainly an owner cannot thus free his property from mechanics' liens. And it was for that reason that the California Court held that the lien would attach. In Crandall v. Sorg, 198 Ill. 48, 64 N. E. 769, there was a contract wherein it was agreed that Hullinger would sell and convey the land to Sorg; that the latter would then execute a lease for ninety-nine years to the former and that a building should be erected on the premises. Later on the lease was executed, and provided also for the erection of a building, and had in it a provision that no mechanics' liens should affect the claims of the lessor in the building and his rights in the premises. The court held that the contract and lease were executed as part of the same transaction; that they constituted one writing and should be construed together, and that when so read together it was manifest that Sorg was "not to be regarded as but an ordinary lessor of the premises." But on the contrary, it was held that the instruments disclosed that Sorg and Hullinger "jointly engaged in an enterprise which had for its purpose the construction of a building for rental purposes on the premises in question." Each put up money for that purpose. Under these circumstances, it was held that the clause in the lease concerning mechanics' liens was of no avail because Sorg was in the position of an owner engaged in erecting a building and not as a lessor.

In Provost v. Shirk, 223 Ill. 468, 79 N. E. 178, there was a contract of sale and lease the same as in the former case, so that the so-called lessor and lessee were jointly [602] engaged in the enterprise and were in the position of owners of the property. These Illinois cases placed the lessors and lessees in the position of two tenants in common, who contract with each other concerning the erection of a building upon their joint premises. In such a case, of course, they could not contract with one another so as to free the property of either from mechanics' liens. The question of abridging the right to make a contract concerning one's property with a lessee or vendee, which would be otherwise lawful, is not involved in any of the cases cited, and has never been passed upon by this court. That question is the one that is now presented. It appears to me that a reasonable view of our mechanics' lien laws is that they do not, expressly or by any implication, say that such a contract made between a bona fide vendor and vendee, or a bona fide lessor and lessee, would have no effect, when due notice has been given thereof. The contract between the lessee and the principal contractors expressly mentioned the lease and it was known that no contract was entered into with the owners of the fee. Owners of property have rights which courts and the legislature must respect. If a contractor has notice that he is to erect a building for a lessee it is reasonable that he should be required to ascertain the contents of the lease if he desires to proceed on the credit of the interest of the lessor. Had the subcontractors and material men investigated the nature of the principal contract they would have known of the lease, could have ascertained all of its provisions, and thus learned that they could not contract or sell on the credit of the lessor's interest. To have done so would have been the exercise of ordinary business diligence. There is nothing in our statutes, that I can find, that permits contractors and others who may have lien claims to proceed without any diligence to ascertain facts that are easily before them. Ordinary diligence [603] may be required of owners who construct or permit to be constructed improvements upon their property which become not only a source of profit to them, but of benefit to an entire community, but ordinary diligence should also be required from those who perform upon the credit of the property. To free lien claimants from ordinary and reasonable diligence is to place an embargo upon improvement and progress. The lease in this case was recorded the day after its execution, and before any right to a lien could have attached. A lease of real property is such an instrument as is entitled to record under sec. 694 Rev. St., and, therefore, its recordation is constructive notice to the world of its contents. While that section does not specifically use the word "lease" it does use the words "agreements in writing of, or effecting title to real estate or any interest therein," and a written lease of land is such an agreement. Besides, sec. 707 says that the term "deed" includes leases, and the term "deed" is used in sec. 694. An instrument that is recorded according to law, and which the statute says shall be notice when recorded, is notice to the world of all the facts and matters therein expressed, and not only of such facts, but of all facts suggested therein and which reasonable inquiry would elicit.—Perkins v. Adams, 16 Colo. App. 96, 63 Pac. 792; Delta County Land, etc. Co. v. Talcott, 17 Colo. App. 316, 68 Pac. 985; Loser v. Plainfield Savings Bank, 149 Ia. 672, 128 N. W. 1101, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1112.

In Armstrong Cork Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerating Co. 184 Fed. 199, 107 C. C. A. 93, there was a lease which provided that the improvements made by the lessee should remain his property, and the court held that the recording of the lease was notice of this stipulation. The court said:

"The record of the lease was notice to the complainant that the improvements he was placing in this warehouse remained the personal property of the lessee, [604] that they did not become a part of the realty and that Lyon's reversion in the warehouse and the land upon which it stood were not chargeable with a mechanic's lien for the purchase price of the work and the material it was furnishing, Faxon v. Ridge, 87 Mo. App. 299, 307, and the conclusion is that the amended bill did not state facts sufficient to show that the complainant was entitled to a lien upon the interest of the lessor in the land and warehouse."

In Cornell v. Barney, 26 Hun 134, there was a lease from the owner in which the lessee agreed to build or cause to be built on the land a building. The lease was recorded. Suit was commenced to foreclose a mechanic's lien against the interest of the lessor, and it was held that when the lease was recorded, the lien claimants were chargeable with notice of all the terms contained in the lease. In Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. Main Line Realty Co. 112 Va. 7, 70 S. E. 536, while it was held that under the Virginia statute the right to a lien would not be implied where a lessee provided that the lessor should erect a building, yet on the question of the effect of the record of the lease the court said:

"It is true, as argued, that the contract of lease required the building to be erected; but it was to be erected by the lessee, and the lessee alone, and at its cost. The lease was of record and the appellants must be charged with notice of its contents."

Undoubtedly the record of the lease was notice to the world that the interest of the lessor was not subject to a mechanic's lien unless it is held that the mechanics' lien statute repealed pro tanto the recording statute. Repeals by implication are not favored. —Haldeman v. Colorado City, 52 Colo. 234, 120 Pac. 1041.

In Dunton v. People, 36 Colo. 128, 87 Pac. 540, it is said:

"If the provisions of the two statutes can be so construed [605] as to stand together, that construction must be given them, and the former is not repealed because they are consistent, and the repealing clause only purports to repeal the inconsistent parts of the act."

In Black on Interpretation of Laws, p. 112, it is said:

"Every new statute should be construed in connection with those already existing in relation to the same subject-matter, and all should be made to harmonize and stand together, if that can be done by any fair and reasonable interpretation, and if the new act does not expressly declare the repeal of an earlier statute, it will not be construed as effecting such repeal unless there is such a repugnancy or conflict between the provisions of the two acts as to show that they could not have been designed to remain equally in force."

The provision in the mechanics' lien laws, that an owner may, in a certain way, give notice that his interest is not to be subjected to a lien, is not at all inconsistent with the recording statute, under whose provisions the same notice may be given in another way. The two statutes can and should be read together and both permitted to stand.

In Boyer v. Keller, 258 Ill. 106, 101 N. E. 237, there was a lease which provided that the premises were to be used only as a theater, and that the lessee would make no alteration to the building on the premises without the written consent of the lessor. The privilege to make alterations was given to the lessee and he was to pay for all made. The lessee made alterations which were permanent in character and increased the value of the premises. The question was presented whether sec. 1 of the Illinois Act, so far as it subjected to a lien the property of one who knowingly permitted another to contract for improvements thereon, violated the constitution of the state. The court said the section did not restrict [606] the right of the owner to freely contract with reference to improvements which should be made upon it. It said that the lessor had the undoubted right to contract with the lessee that any improvements made should be made at the cost and expense of the latter and that the section did not prevent the enforcement of that contract. The court said:

"So long, however, as that contract remained a secret agreement between the lessors and the lessee, said section 1 made the lessor owners liable in case they authorized or knowingly permitted the lessee to contract for the improvement of the property without advising the contractors or material men of the provisions of the lease and notifying them that they must deal with the lessee under its terms."

And it was found that none of the lien claimants knew anything about the provisions of the lease. There was no claim that the lease was recorded. This case simply holds that the provision in a lease against liens that is kept secret and no notice of which is given will not save the interest of a lessor from the lien.

In Pacific Saah, etc. Co. v. Bumiller, 162 Cal. 664, 124 Pac. 230, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 296, the lease between the owners and the lessee provided that the owners should not be liable or responsible for any alteration or repair made in the building, by the lessee and that no alteration should be made without the written consent of the owners. It does not appear that any notice whatever was given of the lease and its provisions, by record or otherwise, and that case was determined as though no such notice had been given.

In Curtin-Clark Hardware Co. v. Churchill, 126 Mo. App. 462, 104 S. W. 476, there was a lease which provided that the lessee should have the right to make alterations in the leased premises and that all improvements made by him should be at his own expense and on his own account. [607] The lease was recorded shortly after it was executed. The court held in that case that the recording of the lease gave the lien claimant constructive notice of its terms, but held that the lien would attach, notwithstanding the agreement that the lessee should do the work at his own cost. This case comes more nearly in point in favor of the claimants than any they have cited. It is to be noticed, however, that the agreement in the lease was not that no right of lien should attach to the interest of the lessor, but that the lessor should construct the improvement at his own expense and on his own account. What is said in Dierks, etc. Lumber Co. v. Morris, 170 Mo. App. 212, 156 S. W. 75, at the top of page 220, kills the decision in the 126 Mo. App. as an authority in this case.

Rehearing denied to plaintiff in error, March 1, 1915.

NOTE.

Mechanic's Lien on Realty for Improvements Made with Consent but Not at Expense of Owner.

Introductory, 1133.

Improvements by Lessee, 1133.

Improvements by Vendee under Contract of Sale, 1135.

Improvements by Mortgagor, 1135.

Notice of Nonresponsibility, 1136.

Introductory.

The purpose of this note is to review the recent cases which consider the right to a mechanic's lien on realty for improvements made thereon with the consent, but not at the expense of the owner. The earlier cases are collected in the notes to Limoges v. Scratch, 19 Ann. Cas. 732; Clark v. North, 11 Ann. Cas. 1080.

Improvements by Lessee.

Under the Code of Alaska Civ. Code C. 28, § 262), which gives a mechanic's lien for work done "at the instance of the owner" it has been held that the work is done "at the instance of the owner" where the lease contains a provision authorizing the lessee to make improvements. Arctic Lumber Co. v. Borden, 211 Fed. 50, 127 C. C. A. 486.

In Arkansas, where the statute (Kirby's Digest, § 4970) gives a mechanic's lien for work performed or materials furnished by virtue of a contract with the owner or his "agent," it has been held that a lessee is not the agent of the owner within the mechanic's lien law, where under the terms of the lease it is optional whether the lessee shall make repairs at his own expense, even though the owner has knowledge that the lessee is making repairs, and makes a reduction in the rent after the repairs are made. Langston v. Matthews, 117 Ark. 626, 173 S. W. 397 (distinguishing Whitcomb v. Gans, 90 Ark. 460, 119 S. W. 676).

In the reported case (Colorado), it is held that provisions in a lease for improvements at the expense of the lessee do not alone make the lessee the "agent" of the owner, under the Colorado statute (R. S. 1908, § 4025), which provides in substance that the owner's interest may be subjected to a mechanic's lien for material or labor supplied at the instance of the owner or his agent. It is further held that the recording of a lease which provides that the owner's interest shall not be subjected to mechanics' liens for improvements, is constructive notice of its contents and destroys any presumption that the lessee is the owner's agent.

The Georgia statute gives to one furnishing material for the improvement of real estate on the employment of a contractor, or some other person than the owner, a lien on the real estate improved for the material used in the improvement. This has been construed to mean that the material must be furnished under contract with a contractor or with some person occupying a similar relation to the owner as that of contractor. Consolidated Lumber Co. v. Ocean Steamship Co. 142 Ga. 186, 82 S. E. 532. Hence it has been held that a material man is not entitled to a mechanic's lien against an owner, where the material is furnished to a lessee, even though the owner consents to the improvement and has knowledge of the contract between the tenant and the contractor. Carr v. Witt, 137 Ga. 373, 73 S. E. 668; Consolidated Lumber Co. v. Ocean Steamship Co. 142 Ga. 186, 82 S. E. 532.

Under the Illinois statute the owner's interest is subject to a mechanic's lien when he "knowingly" permits the lessee to make alterations and repairs at his own expense. Boyer v. Keller, 258 Ill. 106, 101 N. E. 237; Friebele v. Schwartz, 164 Ill. App. 504; Sullivan, etc. Co. v. Richardson, 169 Ill. App. 578. That provision has been declared to be constitutional and under it a provision in a lease that the owner's interest shall not be subject to a mechanic's lien is void. Boyer v. Keller, supra. It has been held that "knowingly" to permit property to be improved is to know that material is being procured for that purpose and that the work is being done and not to object to it. Birmingham v. Gill, 164 Ill. App. 536 (citing Wertz v. Mulloy, 144 Ill. App. 329). Hence where a contract between the owner of the fee and the lessee provides for certain improvements, the interest of the lessor cannot be subjected to a mechanic's lien for other improvements in the absence of any showing that he authorized or consented to the additional work. Birmingham v. Gill, 164 Ill. App. 536.

Under the Kansas statute where a short term lease authorizes the lessee to make improvements at his own expense, and the improvements are to become the property of the owner, the lessee becomes the agent of the owner within the mechanic's lien statute. Long-Bell Lumber Co. v. McCray Band Co. 89 Kan. 788, 132 Pac. 992.

Under the Michigan statute (C. L. 10710), it has been held that the owner's interest cannot be subjected to a mechanic's lien in the absence of a contract express or implied, and that mere consent to improvements by a lessee at the lessee's expense, with a reduction in rent, does not constitute such a contract. Merrill v. Brant, 175 Mich. 182, 141 N. W. 550.

Under the Missouri statute giving a mechanic's lien where the work is done or materials are furnished by virtue of any contract with the owner or his "agent," it has been held that where under the terms of the lease the lessee is required to make improvements at his own expense, he becomes the "agent" of the owner within the statute. Ward v. Nolde, 259 Mo. 285, 168 S. W. 596; Phillip Carey Co. v. Kellerman, Const. Co. 185 Mo. App. 346, 170 S. W. 449. However, the lease must obligate the lessee to make improvements and mere consent from the owner to the lessee to make repairs at the lessee's expense does not constitute the lessee the owner's agent with the statute. Dierks, etc. Lumber Co. v. Morris, 170 Mo. App. 212, 156 S. W. 75; Marty v. Hippodrome Amusement Co. 173 Mo. App. 707, 160 S. W. 26; Ward v. Nolde, 259 Mo. 285, 168 S. W. 596; Ford v. Dixon, 171 Mo. App. 275, 157 S. W. 99; Phillip Carey Co. v. Kellerman, Const. Co. 185 Mo. App. 346, 170 S. W. 449. Hence it has been held that the owner's interest is not subject to a mechanic's lien where the tenant has repairs made under a general covenant to keep the premises in repair. McGuinn v. Federated Mines, etc. Co. 160 Mo. App. 28, 141 S. W. 467. See also Ford v. Dixon, 171 Mo. App. 275, 157 S. W. 99. And it has been held that a general covenant to make improvements will not ordinarily constitute the tenant the owner's agent, so as to subject the owner's interest to a mechanic's lien. Dierks, etc. Lumber Co.

v. Morris, 170 Mo. App. 212, 156 S. W. 75, wherein the court said: "In order to make such covenant constitute an agency between the lessor and lessee we are necessarily bound to look at the facts to determine whether there was an agency or not. If on account of the shortness of the lease, the extent, cost and character of the improvements, or other facts in evidence, such as the participation by the lessor in the erection or construction thereof, it can be seen that the improvement is really for the benefit of the lessor and that he is having the work done through his lessee, then it can be said with justice that the lessee in such case is acting for the lessor. But, if the facts do not show this, it would seem to be untenable to say that the mere inclusion in a lease of a covenant to improve and repair on the part of the lessee will create the relation of agency between the tenant and the landlord, especially where the tenant is to do the work at his own expense and is expressly denied any authority to bind the landlord."

In New York, where the lease provides for specified improvements at the lessee's expense, the owner gives his consent to such specified improvements within section 3 of the Lien Law (Gen Laws, chap. 49 [Laws of 1897, chap. 418] Consol. Laws, chap. 33 [Laws of 1910, chap. 38] sec. 3.). McNulty v. Offerman, 152 App. Div. 181, 137 N. Y. S. 27; Wahle, Phillips Co. v. Fifty-Ninth St. Madison Ave. Co. 153 App. Div. 17, 138 N. Y. S. 13; Wahle-Phillips Co. v. Fitzgerald, 183 Misc. 636, 146 N. Y. S. 562; McNulty v. Offerman, 164 App. Div. 949, 149 N. Y. S. 375. But he does not give his consent, within the above act, to improvements in addition to those provided for in the lease. McNulty v. Offerman, 152 App. Div. 181, 137 N. Y. S. 27; McNulty v. Offerman, 164 App. Div. 949, 149 N. Y. S. 375. Thus it has been held that where a lease provided that the tenant should install a steam heating plant at his own expense, but deductions were made in the rent to cover same, and the owner directed the installation, the owner gave his "consent" within the meaning of the statute. Meistrell v. Baldwin, 144 App. Div. 660, 129 N. Y. S. 670. And where certain improvements cost $60,000, and the lease required the owner to pay the lessee $15,000 as a part thereof and the improvements were to belong to the owner of the building, it was held that the owner "consented" to the improvements. McNulty v. Offerman, 152 App. Div. 181, 137 N. Y. S. 27. Likewise it has been held that the owner gave his "consent" within the statute, where the lessee had without authority removed ceilings, and the owner, after notification from the board of fire underwriters, called on the lessee to change the wiring to meet the requirements of the underwriters, according to the covenants in the lease. McNulty v. Offerman, 152 App. Div. 181, 137 N. Y. S. 27. It is not necessary that the owner of the fee shall be personally liable for the indebtedness to give validity to the lien or any action for the foreclosure thereof. It is sufficient if the labor is performed and the material is furnished with the knowledge and consent of the owner of the fee. Pearce v. Kenney, 152 App. Div. 638, 137 N. Y. S. 475 (reversing judgment 75 Misc. 328, 135 N. Y. S. 537).

Under the North Carolina statute (Revisal § 2016) in order that a mechanic's lien may attach, there must exist the relation of debtor and creditor, and hence it has been held that the owner's interest is not liable to a mechanic's lien by the mere fact that the lessee is given permission to make improvements at his own expense. Weathers v. Cox, 159 N. C. 575, 76 S. E. 7.

Under the Oregon statute giving a mechanic's lien where the work is done or the materials are furnished by virtue of any contract with the owner or his "agent" it has been held that where a lease requires the lessee to make improvements at his own expense he becomes the "agent" of the owner. Oregon Lbr. etc. Co. v. Nolan, 75 Ore. 69, 143 Pac. 935, affirmed on rehearing 75 Ore. 81, 146 Pac. 474.

Under the Texas statute it has been held that the mere fact that the owner acquiesces in or consents to improvements by another on his property does not fix a lien against the owner's interest. Cleburne St. R. Co. v. Barber (Tex.) 180 S. W. 1176; Eardley v. Burt (Tex.) 182 S. W. 721. Thus it has been held that a requirement in a lease that the lessee shall put improvements on the property, which will become the property of the owner on the expiration of the lease, will not of itself be sufficient to subject the owner's interest to a mechanic's lien in the absence of consent from the owner to fix such lien. Cleburne St. R. Co. v. Barber (Tex.) 180 S. W. 1176 (citing Faber v. Muir, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 27, 64 S. W. 940, writ of error denied 65 S. W. XVI.).

In Utah the mere fact that the owner of premises consents to the making of improvements by the tenant gives no right to a mechanic's lien against the premises. Gorman v. Birrell, 41 Utah 274, 125 Pac. 685.

Under the Ontario Mechanics' and Wage Earners' Lien Act (R. S. O. 1914, Ch. 140.) the taking of an agreement from a tenant to make improvements is a "request" within the act, making the interest of the owner liable to a mechanic's lien. Orr v. Robertson, 34 Ont. L. Rep. 147, 8 Ont. W. N. 47.

Improvements by Vendee under Contract of Sale.

Under the Colorado statute it has been held under a written contract of purchase and sale, whereby the vendee is not only permitted but is required to erect buildings on the premises, that the interest of the vendor is subject to a mechanic's lien under the statute (Rev. St. 1908, § 4029), which provides, in substance that the owner's interest shall be subjected to mechanics' liens when the improvements are made with the "knowledge" of the owner and such owner fails to give notice of nonliability as required by the statute. Miller v. Davis, 26 Colo. 483, 145 Pac. 714.

In Illinois, where a vendor under a contract of sale authorizes and knowingly permits the vendee to make improvements, the interest of the vendor is subject to a mechanic's lien. Granite City Lime, etc. Co. v. Pitzman, 161 Ill. App. 228.

Under the Indiana statute it has been held that where the vendee is in possession under a contract of sale, mere inactive consent by the owner to improvements will not subject his interest to a mechanic's lien, but where the vendee is required to make improvements under his contract and the owner advises laborers to do the work, the vendor's interest is subject to a mechanic's lien. Rader v. A. J. Barrett Co. 108 N. E. 883.

Under the Kansas statute it has been held that where the vendor authorizes and consents to have the vendee make certain improvements, the interest of the vendor is subject to a mechanic's lien for such improvements. White v. Kincade, 95 Kan. 466, 148 Pac. 607.

In Missouri it has been held that where a contract for the sale of land obligates the vendee to erect improvements at his own expense, such a contract constitutes the vendee the "agent" of the owner, within the statute, so as to subject the owner's interest to a mechanic's lien Ford v. Dixon, 171 Mo. App. 275, 157 S. W. 99, wherein the court said: "In instances where the owner of the fee enters into a contract of sale or lease, which invests the vendee or lessee with the right to enter into the possession of the premises, and compels him to erect a building thereon or make improvements for the enhancement of the freehold estate, the agency of the vendee or lessee to subject the freehold to mechanics' liens will be implied. O'Leary v. Roe, 45 Mo. App. 567; Dougherty-Moss Lumber Co. v. Churchill, 114 Mo. App. 578, 90 S. W. 405; Curtin-Clark Hardware Co. v. Churchill, 126 Mo. App. 462, 104 S. W. 476."

Improvements by Mortgagor.

Under the Georgia statute in a case where in it appeared that the holder of a deed to real estate made to secure a debt had knowledge of a contract made by the vendor to improve the real estate, and expressly agreed to such contract, it was held that the lien of the contractors bound the interest of the holder of the deed to the real estate. Williams v.

claimed may not be sustained under the provisions of § 4025 as affected by § 4027. The lessors neither participated in the erection or construction of the improvement nor approved the plans therefor. They had nothing to say as to the size and architecture of the building or the material of which it should be built. While it was to cost not less than a substantial, designated sum, there is no allegation nor showing that the rents reserved were greater than the reasonable worth of the vacant lots upon which the improvements were to be constructed. If the improvements increased the value of the freehold interest, it was not primarily so but only as a future incident thereto, and the owner of the fee was not the owner of the building or structure within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law. He would become such owner only by operation of law through the expiration or termination of the lease, or at least only when the building was "commenced and completed," when, by the language of the lease, and not until then, it would become a part of the realty of the lessors.

However, should we assume that presumptively the lessors made the lessee their agent by reason of the covenant to build and certain other conditions in the lease, the clause therein expressly denying to the lessee the right and power to charge any lien or incumbrance of [588] any kind against the lessors or their estate, nullifies and renders non-effective such presumption. When a lease provides that the lessee shall erect a building on the premises and is silent as to the authority or want of authority of the lessee to subject the lessor's interest to a mechanic's lien, it is only by implication that it can be held that such authority exists. No such implication can arise in this case for the lease expressly denies to the lessee the authority to do anything with the premises that would bind the interest of the lessors therein with a mechanic's lien. The laws of this state do not prohibit or render non-effective a contract so limiting the power of a lessee, and it is unnecessary to inquire into the constitutionality of a law that should attempt to prohibit such contracts when the public health, safety, morals and welfare are in no wise involved. The power to contract with reference to one's property is a valuable right and courts should and will construe statutes as not abridging that right, when possible, in order to preserve the constitutionality of the law. Moreover, as a lease of real property is an instrument which, under the law may be recorded and thereupon constitutes constructive notice to those subsequently acquiring an interest in the premises, the rights and authority of the parties thereto and whatever agency it might be presumed was created thereby to deal with the estate, or the interest of either of such parties therein, is necessarily subject to the conditions and limitations expressed in the instrument creating the agency, unless otherwise provided by law. §§ 694, 707, Rev. Stat. 1908; Perkins v. Adams, 16 Colo. App. 96, 100, 63 Pac. 792; Delta County Land, etc. Co. v. Talcott, 17 Colo. App. 316, 321, 68 Pac. 985; Loser v. Plainfield Savings Bank, 149 Ia. 672, 128 N. W. 1101, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1112.

Thus, in Cornell v. Barney, supra, it was held that when the lease was recorded and permanent improvements constructed on the leased premises by the lessee [589] under a covenant in the lease obligating him to do so, lien claimants for such work were chargeable with notice of all the terms contained in the lease. And in Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. Main Line Realty Co. supra, upon the effect of the record of a lease, it is said: "It is true, as argued, that the contract of lease required the building to be erected; but it was to be erected by the lessee and the lessee alone and at its cost. The lease was of record and the appellants must be charged with notice of its contents."

Plaintiffs in error, however, contend that as the clause withholding from, and denying to, the lessee the power to charge the interest of the lessors with any mechanic's lien or incumbrances of any kind, contains a covenant upon the part of the lessee that "it will not permit or suffer any bill of any mechanic, labor or material man to be or remain unpaid," and requires the lessee, before commencing the erection and construction of the building, to furnish a bond satisfactory to the lessors guaranteeing the due observance of the clause, that thereby the contract recognizes that such liens might accrue, be filed, and be binding against the interest of the lessors. We do not concur in this view. On the contrary, we do not think it changes in any manner the meaning of that part of the clause which limits the authority of the lessee in the premises. The lessors were certainly interested in having all bills paid to the end that the lessee's interest in the premises be not subjected to a mechanic's lien and a new tenancy created by operation of law through the enforced assignment of the lease. And this is clearly the purpose of the requirement in that respect.

It is not conceivable that the legislature made provision, as it did by § 4029, supra, whereby an owner could protect his interest in land against mechanics' liens for improvements made thereon with his knowledge but in relation to which he had not contracted, and made like provision by § 4025, supra, whereby he could, when [590] entering into a certain class of contracts, that is, with a contractor or builder, limit to such contract price the lien liability of his land, and intended, as to all other contracts relative to improvements upon land, that an owner's rights in the premises and the liabilities that might be impressed thereon as a lien, could in no wise be protected and limited. Such a legislative enactment, if not unconstitutional, would be, at least, unjust and inequitable. We cannot sanction a rule of law, unless by legislative enactment we are so required to do, whereby one man's property may be taken for the debts of another and such person be without power to prevent it. We, therefore, withdraw the former opinion filed herein and affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Judgment affirmed.

Decision en banc.

Hill and Scott, JJ., dissent.

MUSSEY, C. J. (specially concurring).—I agree that the judgment should be affirmed, but I rest my conclusion solely upon clause six of the lease, which is as follows:

"It is expressly understood and agreed (and notice is hereby given), that nothing herein shall authorize the lessee or any person dealing through, with or under it to charge said lands, or any interest of the lessors therein, or this lease, with any mechanic's lien, or lien or incumbrance of any kind whatever. On the contrary (and notice is hereby given), the right and power to charge any lien or incumbrance of any kind against the lessors, or their estate, is hereby expressly denied, and the lessee covenants that it will not permit or suffer any bill of any mechanic, labor or material man, or for any furnishings or equipments of said premises, to be or remain unpaid. The lessee shall, before commencing the erection and construction of a building on said premises, furnish [591] or cause to be furnished a bond in a bonding company satisfactory to lessors, guaranteeing the due observance of this clause 6."

If a mechanic's lien can be fastened upon the reversionary interest of the lessors it must be that the lease made the lessee the agent of the lessors with authority to so contract with reference to the erection of the contemplated building as to bind the interest of the lessors. The agency, if any, that existed between the lessors and lessees was created by the lease. Plainly that agency did not arise from that part of Sec. 4025 Rev. St. '08, which says that "every contractor, architect, engineer, subcontractor, builder, agent or other person having charge of the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building or other improvement as aforesaid, shall be held to be the agent of the owner for the purposes of this act." The lessee was not one of those enumerated in the statute who, was to be deemed the agent of the owner for the purposes of the act unless the lease created such agency. If the lessee was at all the agent it was by virtue of the lease and not of the statute. It is elementary that the authority of an agent is limited and controlled by the instrument creating the agency and that any person dealing with an agent, and having knowledge of the limitations upon the latter's authority, must at his peril contract with the agent within the known limits of that authority. When a lease provides that the lessee shall erect a building on the real estate and is silent as to the authority or want of authority of the lessee to bind the lessor's interest with a mechanic's lien, it is only by implication, if at all, that it can be said that such authority exists. No such implication can be made in this case, for clause six of the lease, expressly and plainly, in words that need no other construction than their obvious meaning denotes, withholds from and denies to the lessee the authority to bind the interest of [592] the lessors with a mechanic's lien. There is no escape from this. The part of the clause which provides that the lessee would "not permit or suffer any bill of any mechanic, labor or material man, or for any furnishings or equipments of said premises, to be or remain unpaid," is only a personal covenant; that is, one that extends only to the lessors and lessees. Under the lease, a lien would attach to the leasehold interest of the lessee in the premises, and the lessors were interested in seeing that the bills for labor and material were paid. The part of the clause before that withholds from the lessee any and all authority to encumber the lessor's interest with a lien. Nor does the sentence of the clause which provides that the lessee shall furnish a bond guaranteeing the due observance of the provisions of the clause in any manner change the meaning of that part of the clause which limits the authority of the lessee. The lessors were certainly interested in having the provisions of the lease carried out and they had the right to exact a bond guaranteeing such consummation. Any contractor, subcontractor, material man or laborer who would read this clause of the lease could obtain therefrom no other idea than that it was the intention of the contracting parties, the lessors and the lessee, that the interest of the lessors should not be subject to mechanics' liens in consequence of the erection of the building contemplated in the lease.

When the intention of the parties to a contract is found in a contract then it is known what the contract is. What the parties intended by clause six is obvious and plain. If the contract that the interest of the lessors should not be subject to a mechanic's lien is valid then these plaintiffs in error were not entitled to a lien against the inter-estate of the approximate value of $4,000, and chattel property, exclusive of the money in dispute, of a value less than $50.

The executor maintains that, viewing the will as a whole, it cannot be said that the testatrix intended to bequeath the $320 found in the bureau to the defendant in error, while the legatee mentioned in item 2 just as strongly contends that the plain and unambiguous meaning of the term "contents" is of such a character as to carry all the bureau might contain, whether it be wearing apparel, notes, credits, moneys, or what not.

No direct authority can be found in Ohio which will aid the court in its interpretation of the dispute in question, although in other jurisdictions, both in England and the United States, cases are not few which construe substantially similar expressions. [164] In volume 51 of the Connecticut Reports, at page 503, in the case of Webster v. Wiers, the court holds: "A testatrix made the following bequest:—'I give to M. all my household effects, books and papers of value, and everything the house contains.' . . . Held: Not to include a promissory note of $100, and a savings bank book with deposits of $2,500 represented by it, which belonged to the testatrix and were found among her papers in her dwelling house immediately after her death."

Park, C. J., in his opinion in this case, at page 575 says: "It seems clear to us that the articles intended were clearly household effects, such articles as were kept for household and family use. It is true that she uses, at the close of the bequest, the sweeping expression, 'and everything the house contains.' . . . It would be a very unnatural thing that a testator should describe such property, and of such value, merely as household effects and as a part of all the house contained. . . . It is hardly credible that a particular allusion to them should not have been made if she had intended to embrace them in the bequest."

In the case of Gibbs v. Lawrence, 7 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 137, Vice Chancellor Woods, a jurist of great learning and high repute, held that a bequest of "all and singular my household furniture, plate, linen, china, pictures, and other the goods, chattels, and effects which shall be in, upon or about my dwelling-house and premises at the time of my decease," would not include a sum of money (in that case 400 pounds) found in the house.

Consulting some of the leading text-writers on [165] will construction, we find it to be an established course of interpretation that it is a rule of presumption, especially in clauses not residuary, that where a more general description is coupled with an enumeration of things, the description shall cover only things of the same kind; and doubtless words of a general description may, by due regard to the context, be considered as limited by an attempt at particular description.

But let us disregard for the moment all case law on the subject, and also the general rules of construction excepting the most important rule, "that all the words of the will are to be taken into view and not a part of them only; as every word is employed to develop the intention of the testator and all of them taken in connection exhibit a transcript of his mind," and so invoking this cardinal rule, we are irresistibly forced to the conclusion that this aged colored woman did not have the remotest idea of bequeathing to Sadie Harris the money found in the bureau.

A reading of the instrument, a consideration of the circumstances surrounding the testatrix at the time of the execution of the instrument, together with the exercise of a knowledge of human nature, forbid the conclusion that the testatrix wished to bequeath this money in this manner.

The very great detail to which the testatrix resorts in the matter of enumeration of the various articles she specifically bequeaths demonstrates that she in common with the older people of her race and condition held little things, even old trumpery, in high esteem.

[166] Is it not unreasonable to believe that she would bequeath and specifically mention "window blinds, washtub and board, baskets, crooks and jars," and leave unmentioned, except under the general head of "the contents of a bureau," the sum of $320 in money, which exceeded by nearly sevenfold the total value of all her other chattels? And is it not equally incredible that she would employ five of the nine items of her will to dispose of her chattels, of a less value than $50, and not regard the bequest of $320 in money of sufficient moment to justify a line at least for its disposal?

The will speaks eloquently in its wealth of detail in proof of the fact that the aged woman felt that the slightest article which she owned was of sufficient importance to have a place in her will.

Under all these circumstances we feel that it would be doing violence to the intention of the testatrix to pass title to this money under the poor and meager description of "the contents of a bureau," and it must be held as passing to the next of kin, the residuary legatees mentioned in item 9 of the will.

Judgment reversed.

Shauck, Johnson, Newman and Wilkin, JJ., concur.

consented to the improvement in such a way as to permit a lien. In order that a lien may attach, the circumstances must be such as to show consent of the owner or to justify an inference of it. Wheaton v. Berg, 50 Minn. 525, 52 N. W. 926. In order to sustain a lien for the plaintiffs in error in this case, under that section it must be taken that the consent of the lessors is conclusively presumed to have been given in such a manner as would cause their interest in the property to be subject to a lien, because they failed to give the prescribed notice. In the case last cited, the Minnesota court had under consideration a section of the lien laws of that state almost identical with Sec. 4029 of our statutes, and that court struggled manfully to reach the conclusion that the section was constitutional, [596] and in order to do so it held that the presumption that the owner had consented that a lien might attach to his interest in the premises, by failure to give the required notice was prima facie evidence that he had consented rather than conclusive, and that section prescribed a rule of evidence. The court said:

"Those who may be engaged in contributing labor or material which go to the improvement of the land may often have reason to suppose that the work is being carried on at the instance or with the consent of the landowner. It is important to such persons that, if possible, it be made known then if the owner's consent be wanting, and that, therefore, they cannot subject the property to liability for the labor or material supplied by them for its improvement. Hence the statute, in effect, makes it the duty of the owner, who knows of the improvement being made, to give the prescribed notice if he would avoid the inference that is done with his consent. From the neglect of the duty created by statute the inference follows. But it would seem to be impossible to construe this provision as making the mere neglect to give the specified notice conclusive upon the landowner in all cases. The circumstances must be such that he can comply with the statutory requirement, or he cannot be thus concluded."

It can be added with the same degree of force that the circumstances must be such that the persons interested in having a lien attach have not already received notice that the owner's interest shall not be subjected to a lien. The court further said that an owner who has knowledge of the erection of the building upon his premises may nevertheless show that he could not give the required notices and thus excuse his failure for giving them. Equally it can be said under this statute that the owner, in order to relieve his property of a lien may show that he has already given notice to that effect and that all interested did know that he had not consented [597] that his interest should be subject to liens, and that, therefore, it would be a needless thing to give the notice specified in the statute. It cannot be conclusively presumed that the lessors in this case consented that their interest might be subjected to a lien when they expressly contracted with the lessee that it should not be and gave full notice to the world of such contract before anything was done toward the erection of the building. It is to be observed that Sec. 4029 provides for actual or constructive notice at the option of the owner. It does not expressly or impliedly exclude other actual notice, which may be given, nor does it in any manner assume that other constructive notice provided by general statute or law would not be sufficient.

The Minnesota court, after showing that construing the section as conclusive against the landowner, would make it unconstitutional or of doubtful constitutionality, said:

"But some reasonable effect should be given to the statute if it be possible; and this may be done by construing the statutory presumption, which springs from the failure to give notice, as being of a prima facie nature rather than conclusive, and as imposing upon the landowner who, knowing the fact of the improvement, has failed to give the prescribed notice, the burden of relieving himself from the statutory imputation of having consented to what was being done, by proof of his inability to give the prescribed notice of his dissent, and that in fact the improvement was made without his authority or consent. As the statute was obviously intended to establish a rule of evidence, and as it cannot be sustained if the statutory presumption is to be construed as conclusive, but may be if it has the qualified effect which we have suggested, we conclude that it must be so construed. The language of the law does not forbid this construction, and there are apparent reasons which may have led the legislature to impose the burden of [598] proof on the party who has peculiar knowledge concerning the matters to which evidence is to be directed."

From what has been said, it follows that the section furnishes a rule of evidence, by which, in the first instance, the failure of an owner with knowledge to give the notice therein specified raises the presumption that the owner consented that his property be subjected to a lien, and to overcome this presumption that the owner consented that his property be subject to a lien, he must go forward with evidence to show that he could not reasonably give the notice, or that he had already effectually given actual notice, or such constructive notice as would be given by recording a lease with a provision similar to that in clause six of the present lease.

It is held in some authorities that when contracts of sale or of lease require the vendee or lessee to make improvements that the interest of the vendor or lessor will be subject to a lien when there is no stipulation to the contrary. In Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Jones, 187 Ill. 209, 58 N. E. 349, it is said:

"Similar contracts have been before the courts in proceedings to enforce mechanics' liens, and have, without exception, so far as we are advised, been held to amount to authority or consent from the owner to a vendee or lessee to make the improvements, and, in the absence of some stipulation in the agreement to the contrary, to give a lien upon the interest of the owner for materials furnished or labor performed under contracts with the vendee or lessee."

This opinion implies that in instances where the agreement contains a stipulation that the interest of the vendor or lessor shall not be subject to a lien such stipulation controls. The cases cited by plaintiffs in error as sustaining their claims to liens where all cases in which there was an absence of such stipulation in the agreement, or as in Illinois, in the case of a so-called lease, the court found that the relation between the parties [599] was in fact not that of lessor or lessee, but as joint venturers in the construction of a building. In Shapleigh v. Hull, 21 Colo. 419, 41 Pac. 1108, the owner agreed to sell land to a named vendee and the vendee agreed to erect houses on two of the lots. The contract was silent as to the right of the vendee to charge the interest of the vendor with a lien, so that there was an entire absence of any stipulation that the interest of the vendor should not be subject to a lien. It was under these circumstances that our court held that a lien would attach to the interest of a vendor. This court has not decided what the law is in the case of the presence of such a stipulation. Since, the decision in Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, sec. 4029, was passed. It was said in the Minnesota case, supra, that such a statute would permit a vendor who had made a contract similar to the one in Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, to free his property from a lien by giving the prescribed notice. If that is true, then the legislature has modified the rule of law as laid down in Shapleigh v. Hull.

On the other hand, in Wilkins v. Abell, 26 Colo. 462, 58 Pac. 612, there was a mining lease. The court said that by the demise the lessee acquired a qualified interest in the property which entitles him to work the same for his own benefit. In fact it may be said that a mining lease presupposes that the lessee will work the mine, else it would be of no use to him. In that case this court held that, "the lessee is in no sense the agent or superintendent of the lessor, nor is he a

contractor in the contemplation of the statute." (Mechanics' Lien Stats.)

In Antlers Park Regent Min. Co. v. Cunningham, 29 Colo. 284, 68 Pac. 226, this court refused to decide whether or not the principle upon which Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, was decided would be applicable between a lessor and a lessee.

[600] In Williams v. Eldora-Enterprise Gold Min. Co. 35 Colo. 127, 83 Pac. 780, there was an option to purchase a mining property and a lease thereof. The lessee was required to perform a certain amount of work on the property. After showing that the possession of the claim of the lessee and the doing of the work under the lease was as lessee and not as vendee in the option this court refused to apply the doctrine announced in Shapleigh v. Hull, supra, but applied the doctrine announced in Wilkins v. Abell, supra, and said:

"Nor can a lien be asserted as against the lessor owner on the ground that the lessee here occupied some relation to the mine with respect to the working of it other than that of lessee. The contract of leasing did not call for the erection of any permanent improvements. Its only requirement of the lessee in respect to work was that it should begin development work within a certain time and continuously employ two shifts of five men each. In the nature of things, a lease of a mine contemplates that the lessee must do at least ordinary development work. A mine is valuable principally if not wholly on account of the ore it contains, and to extract the same necessarily requires work to be done upon it. The work required here was merely ordinary development work, which brings the case within the holding in Wilkins v. Abell, supra. In other words, the labor performed and materials furnished by the claimants for which a lien is sought were done for and furnished to one who was in possession and developing the same whose only relation to the property, so far as concerns any requirement of work thereon, was that of a mere lessee."

In Colorado Iron Works v. Taylor, 12 Colo. App. 451, 55 Pac. 942; Dougherty-Moss Lumber Co. v. Churchill, 114 Mo. App. 578, 90 S. W. 405, and Jones v. Menke, 168 N. Y. 61, 60 N. E. 1053, there was no stipulation that the interest of the lessor should not be subject to a lien, and [601] hence those cases are not in point here. In the case of Western Lumber, etc. Co. v. Merchants' Amusement Co. 13 Cal. App. 4, 108 Pac. 891, there was a lease, but it did not contain a stipulation forbidding a mechanic's lien on the interest of the lessor. It appeared in that case, and the court found, that the building was really erected by the lessor and that he was using the corporation lessee as an instrument to carry out his own venture. Certainly an owner cannot thus free his property from mechanics' liens. And it was for that reason that the California Court held that the lien would attach. In Crandall v. Sorg, 198 Ill. 48, 64 N. E. 769, there was a contract wherein it was agreed that Hullinger would sell and convey the land to Sorg; that the latter would then execute a lease for ninety-nine years to the former and that a building should be erected on the premises. Later on the lease was executed, and provided also for the erection of a building, and had in it a provision that no mechanics' liens should affect the claims of the lessor in the building and his rights in the premises. The court held that the contract and lease were executed as part of the same transaction; that they constituted one writing and should be construed together, and that when so read together it was manifest that Sorg was "not to be regarded as but an ordinary lessor of the premises." But on the contrary, it was held that the instruments disclosed that Sorg and Hullinger "jointly engaged in an enterprise which had for its purpose the construction of a building for rental purposes on the premises in question." Each put up money for that purpose. Under these circumstances, it was held that the clause in the lease concerning mechanics' liens was of no avail because Sorg was in the position of an owner engaged in erecting a building and not as a lessor.

In Provost v. Shirk, 223 Ill. 468, 79 N. E. 178, there was a contract of sale and lease the same as in the former case, so that the so-called lessor and lessee were jointly [602] engaged in the enterprise and were in the position of owners of the property. These Illinois cases placed the lessors and lessees in the position of two tenants in common, who contract with each other concerning the erection of a building upon their joint premises. In such a case, of course, they could not contract with one another so as to free the property of either from mechanics' liens. The question of abridging the right to make a contract concerning one's property with a lessee or vendee, which would be otherwise lawful, is not involved in any of the cases cited, and has never been passed upon by this court. That question is the one that is now presented. It appears to me that a reasonable view of our mechanics' lien laws is that they do not, expressly or by any implication, say that such a contract made between a bona fide vendor and vendee, or a bona fide lessor and lessee, would have no effect, when due notice has been given thereof. The contract between the lessee and the principal contractors expressly mentioned the lease and it was known that no contract was entered into with the owners of the fee. Owners of property have rights which courts and the legislature must respect. If a contractor has notice that he is to erect a building for a lessee it is reasonable that he should be required to ascertain the contents of the lease if he desires to proceed on the credit of the interest of the lessor. Had the subcontractors and material men investigated the nature of the principal contract they would have known of the lease, could have ascertained all of its provisions, and thus learned that they could not contract or sell on the credit of the lessor's interest. To have done so would have been the exercise of ordinary business diligence. There is nothing in our statutes, that I can find, that permits contractors and others who may have lien claims to proceed without any diligence to ascertain facts that are easily before them. Ordinary diligence [603] may be required of owners who construct or permit to be constructed improvements upon their property which become not only a source of profit to them, but of benefit to an entire community, but ordinary diligence should also be required from those who perform upon the credit of the property. To free lien claimants from ordinary and reasonable diligence is to place an embargo upon improvement and progress. The lease in this case was recorded the day after its execution, and before any right to a lien could have attached. A lease of real property is such an instrument as is entitled to record under sec. 694 Rev. St., and, therefore, its recordation is constructive notice to the world of its contents. While that section does not specifically use the word "lease" it does use the words "agreements in writing of, or effecting title to real estate or any interest therein," and a written lease of land is such an agreement. Besides, sec. 707 says that the term "deed" includes leases, and the term "deed" is used in sec. 694. An instrument that is recorded according to law, and which the statute says shall be notice when recorded, is notice to the world of all the facts and matters therein expressed, and not only of such facts, but of all facts suggested therein and which reasonable inquiry would elicit.—Perkins v. Adams, 16 Colo. App. 96, 63 Pac. 792; Delta County Land, etc. Co. v. Talcott, 17 Colo. App. 316, 68 Pac. 985; Loser v. Plainfield Savings Bank, 149 Ia. 672, 128 N. W. 1101, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1112.

In Armstrong Cork Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerating Co. 184 Fed. 199, 107 C. C. A. 93, there was a lease which provided that the improvements made by the lessee should remain his property, and the court held that the recording of the lease was notice of this stipulation. The court said:

"The record of the lease was notice to the complainant that the improvements he was placing in this warehouse remained the personal property of the lessee, [604] that they

United States.—Foxall v. McKenney, 3 Cranch C. C. 206, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,016.

Connecticut.—Webster v. Wiers, 51 Conn. 569.

Maine.—Andrews v. Schoppe, 84 Me. 170, 24 Atl. 805.

Maryland.—See Lyon v. Safe Deposit, etc. Co. 120 Md. 514, 87 Atl. 1089.

New Hampshire.—Benton v. Benton, 63 N. H. 289, 56 Am. Rep. 512.

New York.—Ludwig v. Bungart, 33 Misc. 177, 67 N. Y. S. 177; Fenton v. Fenton, 35 Misc. 479, 71 N. Y. S. 1083; Matter of Delaney, 133 App. Div. 409, 117 N. Y. S. 838, affirmed without op. 196 N. Y. 530, 89 N. E. 1098.

New Mexico.—Perea v. Barela, 5 N. M. 458, 23 Pac. 766.

Ohio.—See the reported case.

Pennsylvania.—See Krause's Estate, 19 Pa. Dist. 751.

Vermont.—Peaslee v. Fletcher, 60 Vt. 188, 14 Atl. 1, 6 Am. St. Rep. 103; Blackmer v. Blackmer, 63 Vt. 236, 22 Atl. 600.

In Peaslee v. Fletcher, supra, it appeared that there was a devise and bequest of "my home place . . . with my household furniture, and all my personal goods and chattels on said premises at the time of my decease." It was held that promissory notes and money did not pass. The court said: "We must consider all the language of the clause in question—the words, 'my household furniture,' as well as, 'my personal goods and chattels,' and determine, if we can, what relation the respective words bear to each other, whether or not the latter are restricted in their meaning by the former. The authorities on this point are numerous and somewhat conflicting; but we find that the general current of them, both in England and in this country, is, that except in residuary clauses, general words, such as 'goods' and 'chattels,' when following after and coupled with words of a limited signification, are restricted to the same class as the former. Will. Ex. 1015, 1017, and cases cited. . . . Upon these well recognized rules of construction, we hold that the words, 'goods and chattels,' in the connection in which they are found, should be construed as having only a restricted and limited signification and as not including said Maxwell notes and cash on hand; that they are further restricted in their meaning by the word 'personal,' which indicates, when considered in its relations to the words, 'household furniture,' that the testatrix intended by the words in question to bequeath only other articles of the same kind, belonging to the house, 'savoring of the locality,' adapted and pertaining to her personal use. This view is sustained by the fact that no definite amount of money and notes was kept at the house. It often varied with varying circumstances, and the notes and money were carried away and brought back as the testatrix had occasion to go from or return to her home, and were removed when she died." To the same effect see Webster v. Wiers, 51 Conn. 569. In the case of In re Thompson, 217 N. Y. 111, 11 N. E. 762, it was held that a bequest of the "contents of my safe deposit box . . . consisting of jewelry, etc., excepting my Savings Banks books" did not include a certificate of deposit. In Blackmer v. Blackmer, 63 Vt. 236, 22 Atl. 600, it appeared that a clause in a will provided as follows: "I give and devise to my beloved wife, in lieu of dower, my home place. . . . and all the household goods, furniture, provisions, and other goods and chattels, . . . which may be therein at my decease, during her life." It was held that the widow was not entitled to the income of notes which were in the house at the time of the decease of the testator. In Andrews v. Schopp, 84 Me. 170, 24 Atl. 805, it appeared that a testatrix made a bequest to her niece of "all my housekeeping articles, including all my household furniture, beds and bedding, kitchen and table furnishings, books and pictures, all my wardrobe and all other articles of personal property in the house at the time of my death belonging to me." It was held that promissory notes which were in her house at the time of her death were not included in the bequest. The court said: "In this case, the testatrix commences the description of the property which it was her intention to dispose of by this clause with the use of the general term 'all my housekeeping articles.' The evident desire of the testatrix, as manifested from the language used, was to give her niece everything which pertained to her household equipment, and which would render her home life and domestic duties more comfortable and agreeable. In furtherance of this purpose she adds to the general description of her bequest the specification of what her general description includes, namely all her 'household furniture, beds and bedding, kitchen and table furnishings, books and pictures, all my wardrobe and all other articles of personal property in the house at the time of my death, belonging to me.' These specific words of enumeration which the testatrix had used, and which precede the closing portion of the bequest, could not have added anything to the scope of her bequest, if she intended this last clause to cover and pass her entire personal property. If by the language 'all other articles of personal property' she intended to embrace everything which in the broadest legal signification of the term could be the subject of ownership in personal property, the enumeration of the household articles, household furniture, beds and bedding, kitchen and table furnishings, books and pictures and wardrobe, was entirely superfluous. These words, were we to adopt that understanding of her intention, would be meaningless and useless verbiage. If she had intended to give this niece her entire personal property in the house, in terms unrestricted, she might have easily said so without any specific enumeration. She would hardly have applied the term 'articles' of personal property to promissory notes. It is more reasonable and consistent to believe that by the expression 'articles of personal property in the house' she had in mind that class of property which, in the same sentence, she had been enumerating, movable, tangible property, rather than money or choses in action." In Matter of Delaney, 133 App. Div. 409, 117 N. Y. S. 838 (affirmed 196 N. Y. 530, 89 N. E. 1098, and distinguishing Matter of Reynolds, 124 N. Y. 388, 26 N. E. 954), it appeared that there was a bequest of . . . "all the household furniture and personal property of whatsoever kind in my dwelling house." It was held that money and jewelry which were found in the house did not pass to the legatee by the bequest.

The presumption of the intent of the testator to give property of the same kind only as that enumerated may be strengthened by the fact that there is a residuary clause by which property of the general description other than that enumerated would pass, or where there would be substantial disappointment of the residuary disposition if the rule of ejusdem generis was not applied. Matter of Reynolds, 124 N. Y. 388, 26 N. E. 954, affirming 55 Hun 603, 8 N. Y. S. 403, which affirmed 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 725; In re Thompson, 217 N. Y. 111, 111 N. E. 762; Ball v. Dixon, 83 Hun 344, 31 N. Y. S. 990. See also Jones v. Sefton, 4 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 166; In re Miller, 61 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 365; In Ball v. Dixon, supra, it appeared that there was a devise of a farm "together with all the personal property upon said farm, including all the personal property in the house and in the other buildings on said premises." It was held that the contents of a safe including promissory notes, a certificate of deposit and pass books representing money in bank, did not pass, since they were embraced in a residuary clause of the will.

On the other hand the absence of a residuary clause tends to show that the bequest is not to be confined to things ejusdem generis. See infra, the subdivision Exception to Rule.

EXCEPTION TO RULE.

The rule that a bequest or devise of the property, or of the property of a general description, contained in a particular place, when the general description of the property given is coupled with a specific enumeration, passes only things of the same kind as those enumerated, yields where the intent of the testator as gathered from the whole instrument indicates that the property passing should not be so limited. In re Johnston, 26 Ch. D. (Eng.) 538, 53 L. J. Ch. 645, 52 L. T. N. S. 44, 32 W. R. 634; In re Lea, 104 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 253; Mahony v. Donovan, 14 Ir. Ch. 388; Bromberg v. McArdle, 172 Ala. 270, Ann. Cas. 1913D 855, 55 So. 805; Taubenhan v. Dunz, 125 Ill. 524, 17 N. E. 456; Dennett v. Hopkinson, 63 Me. 350, 18 Am. Rep. 227; Perea v. Barela, 5 N. M. 458, 23 Pac. 766. See also Gaff v. Cornwallis, 219 Mass. 226, 106 N. E. 860; Burt v. Harris, 152 N. Y. S. 956; In re Woodside, 188 Pa. St. 45, 41 Atl. 475, 43 W. N. C. 115. In Bromberg v. McArdle, supra, it appeared that a testatrix devised a house to her daughter "together with all household and kitchen furniture, and all other personal property contained in said residence," and imposed on her the payment of a number of demands against the estate. It was held that eight hundred dollars in money found "in a pocketbook in the drawer of a bureau" passed to the daughter. The court said: "It is the contention of counsel for appellant that the words, 'all other personal property,' following as they do, in item 2, the designation of household and kitchen furniture as subjects of bequest to the daughter Elizabeth, restrict the general terms to personalty ejusdem generis with the specified subjects of bequest. The rule to which appellant's counsel appeals is, of course, well recognized. . . . But, as we have said, upon obviously sound reason and abundant authority, the intention of the testator, to be ascertained from the whole instrument, will not suffer sacrifice by adherence, notwithstanding, to the rule stated. . . . The sum of the purpose of the testatrix, to be read from the whole instrument, was to lay the obligation for the payment of the demands mentioned upon the personal estate, in exemption of the real property from charge therefor, and to that end the bequest was of all of the personal estate, contained in the residence, to Elizabeth, whom the testatrix directed to pay and discharge the obligations enumerated. It is argued, in opposition to the interpretation of the will in the particular with which this appeal is concerned, that such a view renders vain the general residuum clause therein. If that effect of the conclusion could, on this record, be affirmed, it would not, in our opinion, suffice to negative the testatrix's stated intent in this regard. Nevertheless, we find nothing in the record even tending to show that at the time of the execution of the instrument the testatrix had no other property, than that previously therein devised or bequeathed, which would then have passed under the influence of the general residuum clause." In Taubenhan v. Dunz, 125 Ill. 524, 17 N. E. 456, it appeared that the sole devisee and legatee named in a will was given among other property, "all the loose property in, on and around the homestead, consisting of one cow, two hogs and a lot of wood, and all other property of every kind." The testator owned a number of promissory notes for money loaned. It was held that as to them he did not die intestate and that they passed to the legatee under the will. The court said: "We can understand how all the loose property in, on and around the homestead might, by application of the principle, be cut down to articles ejusdem generis with cows, hogs and wood; but what shall be said of the further words, 'and all other property of every kind?' with which class or species of property shall they be held to be ejusdem generis? Shall they be cut down and limited to cows, hogs and wood. The testator only had one cow, two hogs and one lot of wood, and these were specifically bequeathed, and to hold the general words limited to the particular articles bequeathed, would be to render inoperative words of the most general import, because there would be no property upon which they could operate and to which they could attach. Operation and effect must be given to each and every provision in the will, as we have seen, unless there is irreconcilable repugnance, or unless the provision is unintelligible. It is clear neither exception here exists; and if the general words, 'and all other property of every kind,' cannot be cut down to the particular articles named in immediate connection, then there are left no particular words, either immediately preceding or following, by which they may be qualified. There are no following words, and the preceding words (excluding, as we have seen we must, the cow, hogs and wood), are themselves general words,—namely, 'all the loose property,' etc." In the case of In re Lea, 104 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 253, it appeared that a codicil after devising a house provided as follows: "I bequeath all my furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, books, pictures, and household effects of every description and all other the contents of the said dwelling-house except any articles I may have bequeathed by my said will to my nephew G. L. Wells." The court in construing the bequest said: "The question here is what passed under a bequest in the codicil. By the will there is a specific bequest of a five star diamond brooch, a large and small gold rose vase, and 20*l.* to a servant, and with the exception of these bequests to trustees upon trust for conversion, and divide the income among certain nephews and nieces, and on the death of the survivor upon trust for the children of nephews and nieces then living. . . . It is said only ordinary household effects pass, and that does not include personal clothing, jewellery, or cash. In my opinion everything in the house passed. The testatrix clearly intended to pass household effects. It is clear to demonstration, all clothing, jewellery, etc., passed." In Perea v. Barela, 5 N. M. 458, 23 Pac. 766, it appeared that there was a bequest to the testator's wife of "all articles of goods in my house, personal furniture, household furniture, and all that therein exists." It was held that an iron box and a safe and the money that they contained passed to the wife. The court said: "We think there can be no doubt but the iron box and iron safe passed to the wife under enumeration of 'articles of goods, personal furniture and household furniture.' But there was something more in the articles enumerated to be disposed of. Therefore the testator adds: 'And all that therein exists.' These words had a meaning to the testator, because he alone knew that the money was there. Taking the language used in the will in connection with the testator's esoteric knowledge of the existence of a large sum of money in the iron box and iron safe, we hardly see how a man ignorant of the rules of the construction of wills could have expressed his thoughts and intentions more clearly than the same were expressed in this will. The purpose of the testator was to dispose of all his property; and, if the contention of appellant be correct, the will gave to the wife the residence of the testator, and a piece of land near the depot in Las Cruces, known as the 'Juan Bautista Armijo and Lopez' land, the household furniture in the residence, ten cows, one small wagon, and two mules. It made specific bequests to various other persons of one thousand, six hundred head of sheep, a house, cows, asses, money, etc., and the remainder of the property to the defendants, and although possessed of a large amount of money, the wife was left without a dollar, except as she might raise it by a sale of the property devised to her. The complainant was the wife of the testator. They had no children. There is nothing in the record to suggest that the testator did not entertain for his wife that complete affection that all good men should have for good wives. No reason existed to indicate that the testator had any cause to deprive his wife of that maintenance and support from his property to which she was entitled. . . . We think it was the intention of the testator to leave the money to the complainant, and that such intention is clearly expressed in the will."

It seems that the intent of the testator not to limit the bequest to things of the same kind as those enumerated may be inferred from the absence of a residuary clause. Mahony v. Donovan, 14 Ir. Ch. 388; Ball v.

Dixon, 83 Hun 34, 31 N. Y. S. 990; Matter of Reynolds, 124 N. Y. 388, 26 N. E. 964, affirming 55 Hun 603, 8 N. Y. S. 403, which affirmed 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 725; Peaslee v. Fletcher, 60 Vt. 188, 14 Atl. 1, 6 Am. St. Rep. 103.

KRICKAU

v.

WILLIAMS.

Rhode Island Supreme Court—December 31, 1913.

36 R. I. 85; 89 Atl. 152.

Attorneys — Summary Control — Transaction outside Professional Relation.

The courts will not maintain summary proceedings to discipline an attorney for alleged misconduct, in order to compel him to pay money or perform any other act, in matters disconnected with his professional duties.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Respondent, an attorney, while not acting for petitioner in a professional capacity, received $500 from her as a loan, and executed a mortgage to secure the same on property, the title to which stood in the name of his mother-in-law. He claimed that the property in fact belonged to him, which the holder of the title admitted; that he had executed the mortgage as collateral entirely on his own suggestion; that it was not demanded by petitioner, nor was it an inducement to the loan, which petitioner admitted. It appeared that at the time respondent fully explained the circumstances to petitioner, and since the commencement of the proceedings to discipline respondent, he had offered to repay the loan, with interest, but petitioner thought she was not at liberty to accept the payment until the conclusion of the proceedings. Held, insufficient to justify any order against respondent.

[See note at end of this case.]

Petition for summary order against attorney at law. Emma E. Krickau, petitioner, and James A. Williams, respondent. The facts are stated in the opinion. PETITION DENIED.

Edward L. Singsen for petitioner.
James A. Williams, pro se ipso.

[86] SWEETLAND, J.—This is a petition asking for summary action against the respondent as an attorney at law. The petition was referred to the committee on complaints against members of the bar. After hearing, said committee reported the matter as one requiring examination by the court. A hearing was had before us at which the parties presented their testimony and arguments.

The petitioner claims that she loaned five hundred dollars to the respondent, and that in the transaction, the respondent committed fraud by reason of a false representation which he made to her as to his ownership of certain real estate upon which he gave the respondent a mortgage as collateral security for said loan.

At the time of making said loan and giving said mortgage the relation of attorney and client did not exist between the parties. The respondent at one time, had acted as attorney for the petitioner in an unimportant matter, but that had been concluded a number of years ago.

[87] The respondent admits that he received five hundred dollars from the petitioner, but claims that he received said sum for the purpose of investing it for the petitioner in a venture in which he was interested with others. The respondent, however, is willing that said transaction should be regarded as a loan of money to him, and herein it will be treated in that manner. The respondent admits that he gave the mortgage in question to the petitioner, and at the time of its delivery he did not have the legal title to the land and building which said mortgage purported to convey; but that the legal title to the same was in his mother-in-law, a Mrs. Crittenden. The respondent claims, however, that the mortgage in question was given as collateral security for said loan entirely upon his suggestion; that it was not demanded by the petitioner; that she agreed to loan the money to him before he suggested the giving of said mortgage; and that said mortgage was not the inducement for making said loan. This is admitted by the petitioner in cross-examination.

The respondent further claims that although the legal title to said real estate was in his mother-in-law, the said mortgage in fact constituted a valuable security for said loan; that said lands and building were purchased by him with his own money and that, although the legal title was taken in the name of Mrs. Crittenden, she acknowledges the respondent's ownership of said real estate and will recognize said mortgage as constituting a valid lien upon said real estate. In this claim, the respondent is fully supported by the affidavit of Mrs. Crittenden, which affidavit was admitted in evidence without objection by the petitioner.

The respondent further claims that at the time of giving said mortgage to the petitioner he fully explained these circumstances to her. This latter claim of the respondent is denied by the petitioner.

It appeared at the hearing that the respondent, since the commencement of these proceedings, has offered to repay said loan with interest and is still ready to do so; [88] but that the petitioner has not felt at liberty to accept said payment until the conclusion of these proceedings.

From the circumstances of this matter, it does not appear to us that a summary order against the respondent should be made upon this petition. The transaction in question was entirely unrelated to the professional character of the respondent. The summary jurisdiction of the court invoked by the petitioner arises from the control which the court will exercise over its officers in regard to those relations of trust and confidence existing between such officers and their clients, which relation arises from the special privilege conferred upon such officers and the special credit given to them by the court as persons worthy to assume such relations of trust and confidence. It is the well settled rule in this country that courts will not exercise such jurisdiction to compel an attorney to pay money or to perform any other act in matters unconnected with the professional character of the attorney. 18 Ann. Cas. 115; 27 Ann. Cas. 234. In Windsor v. Brown, 15 R. I. 182, 9 Atl. 135, 2 Am. St. Rep. 892, the money, for the payment of which the petitioner sought to obtain a summary order against the respondent, an attorney at law, came into the respondent's hands by reason of his position of attorney at law acting for the petitioner. The petitioner, however, before filing her petition had brought an action at law against the respondent for the recovery of said money and had obtained judgment against him. The court recognized the principle that its summary jurisdiction over the respondent depended upon the existence of the relation of attorney and client between the parties and held that "the summary jurisdiction of the court cannot be invoked when the relation of attorney and client has been changed to that of debtor and creditor." Anderson v. Bosworth, 15 R. I. 443, 8 Atl. 339, 2 Am. St. Rep. 910, was a petition for an order requiring the respondent to pay over certain moneys received by him as attorney. The court in that case held that, although the relation existing between the parties was not that of attorney and client it would grant the order on the ground [89] that the money came into the respondent's hands as an attorney at law; and the court recognized the principle as well settled that jurisdiction of this kind is restricted to matters in which the attorney has been employed in his professional character. Although the court will not make a summary order against an attorney in matters of business between him and other persons, when such business is not related to his profession, yet the court will, in any circumstances, for the integrity of the legal profession and the protection of the public, when it appears that the attorney is no longer worthy of confidence, declare his privilege as an attorney entirely forfeited or restrain him by proper discipline. Crafts v. Lizotte, 34 R. I. 543, 84 Atl. 1081.

In the matter at bar the court does not find that moral turpitude on the part of the respondent has been established or that under the testimony the court would be justified in the entry of any disciplinary order against the respondent.

It further appears to the court that the order which the petitioner seeks should not be made even if the relation of attorney and client existed between the parties. From the testimony given before us it is by no means established that the respondent was guilty of misrepresentation in obtaining said loan from the petitioner. Upon the establishment of that fact depends the petitioner's right to have the order which she seeks. There is a dispute between the parties as to such alleged misrepresentation; and in that dispute the contention of the respondent is not so unreasonable that it should be disregarded. If a dispute of this nature exists between attorney and client the rule followed in summary proceedings by the courts of the United States is well stated in Strong v. Mundy, 52 N. J. Eq. 834, 31 Atl. 611: "The behavior which will justify the exercise of this summary jurisdiction must be such as is dishonest or oppressive or clearly illegal. If it appears that there exists between a lawyer and his client a fair dispute, which can be decided only on the settlement of doubtful questions of fact or law, the court should not exercise its summary power, but should [90] leave the parties to their ordinary remedies." That rule has been recognized by this court in Peirce v. Palmer, 31 R. I. 432, p. 445, Ann. Cas. 1912B 181, 77 Atl. 201: "But the principles which govern the action of the court in those cases are equally applicable to any case where a summary order is sought. They arise from the nature of the proceeding. The court, in the exercise of its control over attorneys, will not suffer a manifest injustice on the part of such officers to go uncorrected, and at once, in such a case, without requiring the injured party to resort to the ordinary procedure of the courts, this court will direct its officers to take such action, or to make such payment as justice plainly requires. It makes no difference whether the money has been collected by the attorney for the benefit of the client or whether, as in this case, it has been placed in the hands of the attorney by the client for a specific purpose. If it is beyond reasonable question that there has been misconduct on the part of the attorney in retaining the money, the court will promptly make an order for its payment. But, alike in all cases, for the client to be given this extraordinary relief it must be clear that there has been an injustice done to him. In all cases the client has relief in the ordinary tribunals for the determination of legal controversies, and when his right to have a summary order can be reasonably questioned he must be referred to these ordinary remedies, whatever be the nature of the controversy."

The petition is denied and dismissed.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that a summary order will not be made against an attorney at the instance of a person from whom he has obtained a loan on security claimed to be invalid, the loan having been made at a time when no professional relation existed between the lender and the attorney. The cases discussing the summary power to compel an attorney to pay over money as dependent on the existence of the relation of attorney and client are collated in the notes to Haden v. Lovett, 18 Ann. Cas. 114, and Burns v. Allen, 2 Am. St. Rep. 844, 849. For a discussion of the like limitation on the power to compel summarily acts other than the payment of money, see the note to In re Niagara, etc. Power Co. Ann. Cas. 1913B 234.

SHAW

v.

LORD.

Oklahoma Supreme Court—January 13, 1914.

41 Okla. 347; 137 Pac. 335.

Negligence—Injuring Bystander while Acting in Self-Defense.

It is error to instruct the jury in effect that one who, in his lawful self-defense, at close range shoots at an assailant, and, missing him, accidentally wounds a bystander, who, at the time, is to one side of the line of true aim at such assailant, and a few feet away from him, is, in an action for damages, liable to such bystander if he knew or is chargeable with knowledge of the presence of such bystander, as if this, of itself, constituted want of due care, and therefore was, per se, actionable negligence.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Ordinarily, where a person, in lawful self-defense, shoots at an assailant, and, missing him, accidentally wounds an innocent bystander, he is not liable for the injury, if guilty of no negligence; and the question of negligence is for the jury.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to District Court, Le Flore county: ROSSER, Judge.

Action for damages. Anna Lord, plaintiff, and John Shaw, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Andrews & Day for plaintiff in error.

J. E. Whitehead and C. R. Barry for defendant in error.

[347] THACKER, C.—Plaintiff in error will be designated as defendant, and defendant in error as plaintiff, in accord with their respective titles in the trial court.

On July 1, 1905, defendant, a deputy United States marshal, and Bert True, a posseman, having a warrant duly authorizing them to do so, undertook the arrest of Joseph Smith, who was a fugitive from justice, charged with a felony, and who was believed by defendant to be so dangerous that he might kill an officer trying to arrest him, unless he realized the latter had a clear advantage of him, and that resistance would be futile.

[348] True resided in Wilburton, Okla. (then Indian Territory). Defendant, in response to a phone call from True, who then had possession of the warrant, came to Wilburton about five o'clock in the afternoon, had Smith pointed out to him on a street by some one, and thereafter, between five and six o'clock in the afternoon, with True, for the purpose of arresting Smith, went to a hotel in Wilburton, where Smith was eating supper, and where he had spent the preceding night. Upon arrival at the hotel, defendant requested and caused a lady, who was in the hall leading from the front door, on the north, to the door of the dining room, on the south, to request Dave Nowland, a boarder at the hotel, who was an ex-officer, and well known to defendant, to come from the dining room to the front porch, on the north of the hotel, where, according to the undisputed testimony of defendant, of True, and of Nowland, defendant ascertained from Nowland that Smith was then eating supper in the dining room, informed Nowland of the purpose of himself and True to arrest Smith, and requested Nowland to follow Smith from the dining room into said hall, and there seize him from behind so as to prevent him from drawing any weapon, while they effected the arrest: and, although Nowland testified he did not intend to "arrest" Smith, nor to exactly comply with defendant's request, when he left the table with Smith, he further testified, in effect, that he started to follow Smith out to see what might occur, and render such assistance as he could; and it appears to be uncontradicted that Nowland assented to defendant's plan for the arrest, and that defendant, with good reason, believed that Nowland would follow and seize Smith so that his arrest might be safely effected. When Smith left the supper table, it appears that Nowland also left it, and went as far as the door of exit from the dining room into the hall, but met and turned back with a fellow boarder to seats at the table, perhaps abandoning his purpose to assist defendant.

It appears that Smith knew defendant, but it does not appear whether the defendant knew or suspected this, nor whether in fact Smith knew he was an officer; and it appears that True, if not the defendant, saw Smith step from the dining room into [349] the hall, then step back into the dining room, and then, at once, come forth into the hall, when the shooting occurred, but it does not appear whether Smith saw or knew True before his final exit from the dining room.

Smith and one Thurston, the latter in front, entered the hall about the same time immediately preceding the shooting, and defendant, who was in waiting with True on the front porch, hearing them, if no one else approaching, either immediately before or immediately after Smith made his final exit from the dining room, advanced to the front door and looked into the hall from the porch, and, evidently to his surprise, discovered that Smith, after making his final exit from the dining room, was approaching without any one holding or in position to seize him, whereupon, when Smith had gotten half or two-thirds the way along the hall, a shooting combat at close range occurred between defendant and True, on one side, and Smith, on the other.

The evidence is very conflicting, and the facts not fully developed as to some of the features of the combat; but it seems reasonably certain that Smith, in a crouching position, and with his hand on his pistol in his hip pocket, was approaching defendant before defendant fired at him, and perhaps before defendant drew or commenced to draw his pistol (one of plaintiff's witnesses, Mr. Thurston, in a measure, corroborates defendant on this point, and it is undisputed). It also seems certain that both defendant and True, the former first, fired at Smith from their position in the front door, at the north end of the hall, and that Smith, after defendant fired, fired and struck the door stop so close to True's head as to cause splinters therefrom to strike his cheek. It also appears reasonably certain, notwithstanding the testimony of one witness to more, that only one shot was fired by defendant and one by True before Smith, who also probably fired only one shot, got out to the steps in front of the hotel.

Plaintiff, then a girl of fifteen years engaged in work at the hotel, without notice of the impending danger, stepped into the hall, from a washroom, within a few feet of Smith, but, it appears, to the east of him, and there received a wound in her [350] right side when the shooting commenced; and, although both defendant and True testified in effect that the shot fired by the latter was the one that struck her, and plaintiff so stated soon after she was shot, we must assume, in deference to the verdict and her testimony to that effect, that defendant's shot, which was the first one fired, was the one that struck her. It appears that the ball entered in front, at about the eighth rib, and made its exit about six inches back, without penetrating the cavity of her body; and, besides being confined to her bed for about two weeks, with the suffering incident to such case, she has since suffered occasional soreness at the places of entrance and exit of ball and, during cold weather, pain in her shoulder, "just like [she] did when [she] was shot." It is alleged in plaintiff's petition that defendant entered the hotel "excitedly, and drew a pistol from his pocket, and began firing the same rapidly and excitedly, and in a very careless manner; that one bullet from the pistol penetrated the body of plaintiff . . . that said shooting by said defendant was wholly without cause; . . . that, by reason of said wrongful and negligent act of the said defendant in shooting this plaintiff, as aforesaid, she has been damaged," etc.

The defendant's answer, besides a general denial, especially denies that he fired the shot which wounded plaintiff, and shows that he was authorized to arrest Smith, that the shot he fired was in necessary self-defense while lawfully and properly endeavoring to arrest Smith, so that, if, by chance, the shot fired by him struck plaintiff, he is not liable for damages for such accident.

The trial court instructed the jury that defendant had the right to fire at Smith when he did; but further instructed in effect that defendant would be liable to plaintiff for damages if he was guilty of negligence in shooting at Smith without due regard for the safety of bystanders, and, still further, as if this, of itself, constituted want of due care, and therefore was, per se, actionable negligence, that "if, at the beginning of the difficulty, Shaw saw this woman, or should have seen her, and began firing, [351] knowing she was there, and a ball from his pistol struck her, then he would be responsible."

In Croker on Sheriffs (2d ed.) sec. 62, it is said: "The arrest may be made in any place, for no place affords protection to a criminal, not even the church or the churchyard." To the same effect, see Murfree on Sheriffs, secs. 161, 162; New England Sheriffs and Constables (Hitchcock) sec. 167; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 855.

There can be no doubt of defendant's right, and under the evidence we must assume it was his duty, to effect the arrest of Smith at the hotel; but, of course, this does not relieve him of the duty to exercise such care to avoid injury to other persons as a person of ordinary prudence would usually exercise in doing so under like circumstances, or, which, in the present case, is its equivalent differently stated in respect to criteria, such care as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of great importance, and, in this respect, great care.

In Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75, it is held: "Where a person in lawful self-defense fires a pistol at an assailant, and, missing him, wounds an innocent bystander, he is not liable for the injury, if guilty of no negligence."

To the same effect, see Paxton v. Boyer, 67 Ill. 132, 16 Am. Rep. 615. These, which are the only cases we find deciding this precise point, appear to be in accord with the general rule that, "where an act is lawful in itself, injury resulting therefrom is not actionable, unless the act is done at a time, or in a manner, or under circumstances indicative of a want of proper regard for the rights of others." Boynton v. Rees, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Howland v. Vincent, 10 Mete. (Mass.) 371, 43 Am. Dec. 442; Tourtellot v. Rosebrook, 11 Mete. (Mass.) 460; Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 293; Rockwood v. Wilson, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 221; Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 522; Norfolk, etc. R. Co. v. Gee, 104 Va. 806, 52 S. E. 572, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 111; Pickens v. Coal River Boom, etc. Co. 51 W. Va. 445, 41 S. E. 400, 90 Am. St. Rep. 819. And the two cases, Morris v. Platt and Paxton v. Boyer, supra, also appear to be but concrete applications of the rule that [352] there is no liability for the results of an accident, unless the person causing same is guilty of negligence. See 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 273. The rule as announced in the cases of Morris v. Platt and Paxton v. Boyer, supra, is stated in Hale on Damages (2d ed.) sec. 5, p. 19, citing, besides said two cases, Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892, which is reported in 96 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 525, and is instructive.

Ordinarily, and so far as appears in this case, this must be the correct rule; and the only qualification thereof that in any case would seem to commend itself is that, where such self-defense is obviously dangerous to others, and the necessity thereof may be avoided by withdrawing from the combat, or, in other words, by "retreating to the wall," we apprehend it would be for the jury to say whether due care for the safety of bystanders would not require such avoidance.

The instruction that "if, at the beginning of the difficulty, defendant saw plaintiff, or should have seen her, and began firing, knowing she was there, and a ball from his pistol struck her, then he would be responsible," appears to be error.

If, as affecting only Smith's rights in this regard, defendant had the right to shoot at Smith when he did, the mere fact that he may or should have seen or known that plaintiff was near Smith, but to one side of the line of a true aim, would not necessarily render him liable for the accident; certainly not, if in gun used, in aim taken, and in manner and means of firing he exercised that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would usually exercise.

Although defendant may be chargeable with knowledge as to where plaintiff was when he began to fire, the question as to whether he was negligent was for the jury; and, for aught that appears, she may have been so far to one side of a line of true aim as to have reasonably presented to him the appearance of safety, if he saw her—he being close to Smith when he fired.

In anticipation of a new trial in this case, we should, perhaps, state that, if there should be evidence tending to show that, without greater risk of the escape of Smith, the arrest might within the knowledge of or chargeable to defendant have been [353] effected elsewhere, or in a different manner, or by different means than it was, with less danger of resistance by Smith, or less danger of injury to bystanders as a result of such resistance, the defendant being informed and believing that Smith was dangerous to the extent hereinbefore stated, it would not be improper to submit to the jury the question as to whether defendant was in that respect guilty of actionable negligence in failing to exercise due care for the safety of bystanders, which was a proximate cause of the injury inflicted upon the plaintiff, as well as to whether he was guilty of such negligence in the manner or means of his lawful self-defense, if the same was lawful. And, in this connection, it may be observed that, although Smith, in an assault upon defendant, may have been guilty of a wrong making self-defense necessary to defendant, and thus proximately causing the injury to plaintiff, and therefore liable to her in an action for damages, this would not necessarily relieve defendant of liability if he were guilty of a wrong in failing to exercise due care for the safety of bystanders, which was also a proximate cause of the same.

For the reasons stated, this case should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

BY THE COURT.—It is so ordered.

NOTE.Liability as for Negligence of Person Who Injures Bystander while Acting in Self-Defense.

The question of the liability as for negligence of a person who injures a bystander while acting in self-defense has been passed on in but a few cases. These are, with one exception, in accord with the doctrine of the reported case that under such circumstances there is no liability where the defendant acts as a reasonably prudent man would act in a similar situation. Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75; Paxton v. Boyer, 67 Ill. 132, 16 Am. Rep. 615. See also Courvoisier v. Raymond, 23 Colo. 113, 47 Pac. 284; Crabtree v. Dawson, 119 Ky. 148, 83 S. W. 557, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1046, 115 Am. St. Rep. 243, 67 L.R.A. 565. Thus in Morris v. Platt, supra, the plaintiff, who had been wounded by the defendant while the latter was defending himself against attack by a number of persons, claimed that he was a bystander and requested the court, in an action brought by him for damages, to charge the jury in substance that if they so found, he was entitled to recover, even though they should also find the defendant to have been lawfully defending himself against his assailants, and that the injury to the plaintiff was accidental. The charge was given, but on appeal was held to be erroneous, the court saying: "That request of the plaintiff embodies the unqualified proposition that a man lawfully exercising the right of self-defense, is liable to third persons for any and all unintentional, accidental injurious consequences which may happen to them. . . . If the defendant had been in the act of firing the pistol at an assailant in lawful self-defense, and a flash of lightning had blinded him at the instant and diverted his aim, or an earthquake had shaken him and produced the same result, or if his aim was perfect but a sudden violent puff of wind had diverted it or the ball after it passed from the pistol, and in either case the ball by reason of the diversion had hit the plaintiff, the accident would have been so affected in part by the uncontrollable and unexpected operations of nature as to be inevitable or absolutely unavoidable; and there is no principle or authority which would authorize a recovery by the plaintiff. And, in the second place, if while in the act of firing the pistol lawfully at an assailant, the defendant as stricken, or the pistol seized or stricken by another assailant, so that its aim was unexpectedly and uncontrollably diverted towards the plaintiff; or if while in the act of firing with a correct aim, the assailant suddenly and unexpectedly stepped aside, and the ball passing over the spot hit the plaintiff, who till then was invisible and his presence unknown to the defendant; or if the pistol was fired in other respects with all the care which the exigencies of the case required or the circumstances permitted, the accident was what has been correctly termed 'unavoidable under the circumstances,' and whether the defendant should in such case be holden liable or not is the question we have in hand. For, in the third place, if the act of firing the pistol was not lawful or was an act which the defendant was not required by any necessity or duty to perform, and was attended with possible danger to third persons which required of him more than ordinary circumspection and care, as if he had been firing at a mark merely; or if the act though strictly lawful and necessary was done with wantonness, negligence or folly, then, although the wounding was unintentional and accidental, it is conceded, and undoubtedly true, that the defendant would be liable. In this case the rule of law claimed by the plaintiff, and given by the court to the jury, authorized them to find a verdict for the plaintiff if they found the accident to belong to the second class, and to have been 'unavoidable under the circumstances.' We have seen that if the injury had been consequential and the form of action case, the defendant would not have been liable, and the question returns, whether he can and should be holden liable because the injury was direct and immediate and the form of action is trespass. I think not, whether the decision of the question be made upon principle or governed by authority."

So in Paxton v. Boyer, 67 Ill. 132, 16 Am. Rep. 615, which was an action for assault and battery, it appeared that the defendant, while fighting with the brother of the plaintiff, was knocked down and on arising struck the plaintiff with a knife, for which the plaintiff brought action. The jury found generally for the plaintiff in the sum of $450 and found specially that "the blow complained of was struck by the defendant without malice, and under circumstances which would have led a reasonable man to believe it was necessary to his proper self-defense." The appellate court reversed the judgment and said: "Can it be a question that, for an act done under such circumstances, the party doing the act is liable either civiliter or criminaliter? The rule is well established that, in an action of assault and battery, the plaintiff must be prepared with evidence to show, either that the intention was unlawful, or that the defendant was in fault. 2 Greenleaf on Ev. sec. 85. The jury, by their special finding, have ignored the unlawful intention, and have said the defendant was not in fault. On what principle, then, can he be made chargeable? If a person, doing a lawful act in a lawful manner, with all due care and circumspection, happens to kill another, without any intention of doing so, he is not liable criminally. How, then, can it be said he shall be responsible in a civil case, when, in doing a lawful act with due care, and an injury happens, he shall be deemed in fault, and mulcted in damages?"

In the English case of James v. Campbell (1832) 5 C. & P. 372, 24 E. C. L. 367, however, where a person who had been struck unintentionally by the defendant who was fighting with a third person, brought an action for the assault, the court charged the jury as follows: "If you think, as I apprehend there can be no doubt, that the defendant struck the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to your verdict, whether it was done intentionally or not. But the intention is material in considering the amount of the damages."

SHEROD ET AL.

v.

AITCHISON ET AL.

Oregon Supreme Court—June 16, 1914.

71 Oregon 446; 142 Pac. 351.

Injunctions — Against Criminal Prosecution.

The threatened prosecution of a criminal action will not usually be enjoined, under L. O. L. § 389, authorizing suits in equity where there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The mere invalidity of a statute or ordinance is not sufficient to authorize an injunction against a prosecution thereunder, since such invalidity may be interposed as a complete defense to the prosecution.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where an attempted enforcement of an invalid ordinance or statute would do irreparable injury to property rights, a court of equity may restrain the maintenance of the criminal actions.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

In an action to enjoin a prosecution for carrying on business without a license in violation of Laws 1913, p. 143, providing that no person shall sell or receive or solicit consignments, or farm, dairy, orchard, or garden products for sale upon commission, where the complaint does not deny that plaintiff is engaged in such business, it is insufficient to authorize equitable interference.

[See note at end of this case.]

Actions and Proceedings — Moot Question.

A case in which a party asks to have determined an abstract question which does not arise on existing facts, or involve conflicting rights so far as he is concerned, presents a moot inquiry, which will not be considered.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah county: CLEETON, Judge.

Action for injunction. J. G. Sherod et al., plaintiffs, and Clyde B. Aitchison et al., defendants. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal. AFFIRMED.

[447] This is a suit by J. G. Sherod and others against Clyde B. Aitchison and others, to enjoin threatened prosecution of criminal actions, and is based on the ground that the enforcement of an alleged void statute would injuriously affect the plaintiffs' property rights. The complaint charges, in effect, that the several plaintiffs, either as a person, firm or corporation, has invested sums of money in securing and maintaining at Portland, Oregon, a place of business, and is engaged as a dealer in farm, dairy, orchard and garden produce; that the principal business of each is the purchase and sale of such commodities on his, their, or its own account, and not for any shipper or consignor; that the defendants, Clyde B. Aitchison, Frank J. Miller and Thomas J. Campbell, compose the Railroad Commission of Oregon, and as such claim the right, under Chapter 88 of the General Laws of Oregon of 1913, to demand from each plaintiff a sum of money for a license to engage in such business, and the execution of a bond as security for the faithful performance of the conditions of the statute, and in default thereof to cause the individual, who for himself, or as a partner, or a member of a corporation conducting such purchases and sales, to be arrested and fined; that these defendants have directed the defendant Walter H. [448] Evans, the district attorney of Multnomah County, Oregon, to institute criminal actions against the plaintiffs for that neither has complied with the requirements of that enactment, and criminal complaints are about to be filed against them; that the defendant T. M. Word is sheriff of that county, E. A. Slover is the chief of police of that city, and A. Weinberger is the constable of Portland district; that the statute referred to is void, in that it contravenes certain provisions of the organic law of Oregon and of the Constitution of the United States, setting forth the particulars with respect to each; that unless the defendants are enjoined from enforcing the provisions of this act, the plaintiffs will suffer irreparable loss and injury, to redress which they are without any plain, adequate or complete remedy at law.

A demurrer to the complaint on the ground inter alia that it did not state facts sufficient to authorize equitable interference was sustained, and, the plaintiffs declining further to plead, the suit was dismissed, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Reed & Bell, for appellants.

Andrew M. Crauford, Joseph A. Benjamin, Walter H. Evans for respondents.

MOORE J. (after stating the facts).—It will be assumed that the complaint alleges such an injury to property rights as will authorize the intervention [449] of equity to enjoin the maintenance of criminal actions, if it be conceded that the averments of the primary pleading bring the case within the rule which permits a party to challenge a statute or an ordinance on the ground that it is void.

1. Where a party has a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law for the enforcement or protection of a private right or the prevention of or redress for an injury thereto, a court of equity will not intervene, and hence the threatened prosecution of a criminal action will not usually be enjoined: Section 389, L. O. L.

2. The mere alleged invalidity of a statute or an ordinance is not a statement of facts sufficient to authorize equitable intervention, since such void enactments may be interposed as and constitute complete defenses to the prosecution of criminal actions, and for that reason they are available in a court of law: Thompson v. Tucker, 15 Okla. 486, 83 Pac. 413, 6 Ann. Cas. 1012 and notes.

3. One of the exceptions to this general rule is where an attempted enforcement of an invalid ordinance or statute would result in irreparable injury to property rights, in which case a court of equity may restrain the maintenance of criminal actions: New Orleans Baseball, etc. Co. v. New Orleans, 118 La. 228, 42 So. 784, 118 Am. St. Rep. 366, 10 Ann. Cas. 757, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1014. To the same effect, see, also, the notes to Telegraph Co. v. Powers, 1 Ann. Cas. 119; Sullivan v. San Francisco Gas, etc. Co. 7 Ann. Cas. 574. This departure from the ordinary precept has been recognized and followed in Oregon: Sandys v. Williams, 46 Ore. 327, 336, 80 Pac. 642; Hall v. Dunn, 52 Ore. 475, 481, 97 Pac. 811, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193; Portland Fish Co. v. Benson, [450] 56 Ore. 147, 155, 108 Pac. 122; Spaulding v. McNary, 64 Ore. 491, 497, 130 Pac. 391, 1128.

4. A case in which a party seeks to have determined in a judicial proceeding an abstract question which does not arise upon existing facts or involve conflicting rights, so far as he is concerned, presents a moot inquiry which will not be considered. An action, in order to be bona fide, must present an actual controversy, having adverse interests, and be instituted and maintained to redress the grievance of the plaintiff and not to affect third persons: Ward v. Alsop, 100 Tenn. 619, 46 S. W. 573.

5. Under the decisions of this court, to entitle a party to invoke equitable intervention to restrain the enforcement of an alleged void penal statute, on the ground that it would injuriously affect his property rights, he must allege in his complaint that the business in which he is engaged is clearly interdicted by the provisions of the enactment, or he may aver that, although the law has no application to his business, yet he is threatened with its attempted enforcement by a criminal action, in which latter case his complaint must, in the description of such business, traverse each specification of the statute or ordinance that is conditionally or ultimately prohibited.

Section 1 of the statute in question reads:

"For the purposes of this act a commission merchant is defined to be a person, firm or corporation whose principal business is the sale of farm, dairy, orchard or garden produce on account of the shipper or consignor, or solicit consignments of any character. No person shall sell or receive or solicit consignments, of such commodities for sale, on commission without first obtaining a license from the State Railroad Commission to carry on the business of a commission merchant and executing and filing with the Secretary of [451] State a bond to the state for the benefit of his consignors; the amount of the bond to be fixed and sureties to be approved by the commission, who may increase or reduce the amount of the bond from time to time."

The complaint herein traverses the several classes of business enumerated in the part of the statute quoted, except the receiving or soliciting of consignments of any farm, dairy orchard or garden produce for sale upon commission.

This specification is by the statute made a prohibited class of business, separate and distinct from the sale of such commodities, and, not having been denied in the complaint, the facts stated therein are insufficient to authorize equitable interference. Such being the case, no error was committed in sustaining the demurrer. The decree should therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

Rehearing denied July 14, 1914.

NOTE.Power of Equity to Enjoin Criminal Prosecution.

Scope of Note, 1153.

General Rule, 1153.

Exceptions to Rule, 1154.

Scope of Note.

The present note discusses the recent cases passing on the power of a court of equity to enjoin a criminal prosecution. The earlier cases are discussed in the notes to Fritz v. Sims, 19 Ann. Cas. 458, and Crighton v. Dahmer, 35 Am. St. Rep. 666. For a discussion of the question whether an injunction will be granted against a prosecution under an invalid ordinance see the notes to Thompson v. Tucker, 6 Ann. Cas. 1012, and New Orleans Baseball, etc. Co. v. New Orleans, 10 Ann. Cas. 757.

General Rule.

The general rule that an injunction cannot be employed to restrain a criminal prosecution finds support in the recent cases. De Queen v. Fenton, 98 Ark. 521, 136 S. W. 945; Ferguson v. Martineau, 115 Ark. 317, 171 S. W. 472; Chicago v. Chicago City R. Co. 222 Ill. 560, 78 N. E. 890; Snouffer v. Tipton, 161 Ia. 223, 142 N. W. 97, L.R.A. 1915B 173; Randolph v. Kensler, 95 Kan. 32, 147 Pac. 1132; Franklin v. Lacey, 157 Ky. 281, 162 S. W. 1126; Sennette v. Police Jury, 129 La. 728, 56 So. 653; Milton Dairy Co. v. Great Northern R. Co. 124 Minn. 239, 144 N. W. 764, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951; Claiborne County v. Owen, 100 Miss. 462, 56 So. 525; Kearney v. Laird, 164 Mo. App. 406, 144 S. W. 904; Rosenberg v. Arrowsmith, 82 N. J. Eq. 570, 89 Atl. 524; Chadwick Park Athletic Club v. Peasley, 142 N. Y. S. 586; Genesee Recreation Co. v. Edgerton, 158 N. Y. S. 421; Southern Exp. Co. v. High Point, 167 N. C. 103, 83 S. E. 254; Cullom v. O'Brien, 3 Tenn. Civ. App. 15; Lane v. Schultz (Tex.) 146 S. W. 1009; Winn v. Dyess (Tex.) 167 S. W. 294. See also Georgia Athletic Club v. Atlanta, 139 Ga. 176, 77 S. E. 30; Crawford v. Marion, 154 N. C. 73, 69 S. E. 763, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193. Thus in Kleine v. Oates (Mich.) 153 N. W. 675, the court quoted with approval the following statement: "It is a general rule that criminal prosecutions cannot be restrained by injunction. Once have it understood that they may be, and the public would labor under additional embarrassment to the already great obstacles to the prevention of crime. There is no excuse, upon reason or authority, for enjoining the prosecution of the complainant for violations of the law providing for a close season. If the law were unconstitutional, it would be available by way of defense to the criminal charge, and therefore no occasion for chancery to take jurisdiction for the want of an adequate remedy at law. See Mechem, Pub. Off. sec. 992, and cases cited. It has never been found necessary or expedient that the validity and construction of criminal laws should be determined in chancery, for the guidance of courts of criminal jurisdiction."

Ann. Cas. 1916C.—73.

So in Sociological Research Film Corp. v. New York, 83 Misc. 605, 145 N. Y. S. 492, it was held that an injunction would not be issued to prevent the police from interfering with the production of a moving picture called the "Inside of the White Slave Traffic," which was in violation of the penal code. The court said: "The theatre in question is operated pursuant to a license granted by the city authorities and subject to the inspection and supervision of such authorities. I doubt if the owners of the plaintiff corporation would have had the audacity to undertake the public display of certain revolting details contained in the exhibition, knowing, as they must, that their business exists by mere sufferance of the law, if it were not for the general discredit in which they evidently but erroneously believe the police to be held in this city. The police as body is entitled to, and I believe has, the confidence of the community at large, notwithstanding the reflections now and then cast upon it by the conduct of some of its unworthy members. It would be equally unjust, of course, to stigmatize theatrical managers as a class because of exhibitions of depravity and inordinate greed for gain on the part of some of its members. I have been unable to find in any reported case in this department a single instance of police interference with theatrical productions which was not justified by such disregard for conventional decency on the part of the owners thereof as to amount to a violation of law. When persons engaged in merely licensed callings, as distinguished from conceded lawful lines of business, abuse their license and run foul of the Penal Law, they will be relegated by a court of equity to the tribunal where such matters belong." Similarly in Klinger v. Ryan, 91 Misc. Rep. 71, 153 N. Y. S. 937, it was held that equity would not interfere with the criminal prosecution of a motion picture concern even though the police were mistaken in their conception of the statute. The court said: "The general rule is that equity will not interfere to prevent the enforcement of the criminal law, although the police are mistaken in their opinion as to what constitutes a crime. So held in the cases of Sunday shows at the well-known Eden Musee (wax figures) (125 App. Div. 780); at the Keith & Proctor theatres (125 App. Div. 791); and at the Manhattan Theatre (movies) (125 App. Div. 784), the Appellate Division, in each case, and many others, reversing Special Term orders granting such injunctions against police interference. I am well aware that equity will by injunction prevent irreparable injury by unlawful trespass of the police on private property, as held in Fairmount Athletic Club v. Bingham, 61 Misc. 419, but that principle has no application here."

In Cutsinger v. Atlanta, 142 Ga. 555, 83 S. E. 263, L.R.A.1915B 1097, an injunction was allowed restraining the city authorities from unwarrantedly prosecuting the defendant, which meant a heavy financial loss to the defendant.

Exceptions to Rule.

The recent decisions support the exception to the general rule that when a criminal statute is void or alleged to be void on constitutional grounds and its enforcement will work irreparable injury, a court of equity may enjoin proceedings thereunder. Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S. 605, 32 S. Ct. 340, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 570, affirming Same v. Dickinson, 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 338; Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Alabama R. Commission, 191 Fed. 757; Little v. Tanner, 208 Fed. 605; Van Deman, etc. Co. v. Rast, 214 Fed. 827; Grand Union Tea Co. v. Evans, 216 Fed. 791, citing Little v. Tanner, 208 Fed. 605; American Sugar Refining Co. v. McFarland, 229 Fed. 284; Zweigart v. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. 161 Ky. 463, 170 S. W. 1194; Clark v. Harford Agricultural, etc. Ass'n, 118 Md. 608, 85 Atl. 503; Huntworth v. Tanner, 87 Wash. 670, 152 Pac. 523. See also Wiseman v. Tanner, 221 Fed. 694; Evansville Brewing Ass'n v. Jefferson County Excise Commission, 225 Fed. 204; Paye v. Bennett Piano Co. 21 Pa. Dist. 381. And see the reported case. Thus in Spaulding v. McNary, 64 Ore. 491, 130 Pac. 391, 1128, it was said: "The rule is well established that if the threatened enforcement by prosecuting officers of a void statute will affect the property rights of a party, injunction will lie to prevent the menace from being carried into effect; and that the conduct of such officers, in the case indicated, are their personal acts in which the state is not involved." And in Lewis v. Turner, 139 Ga. 174, 76 S. E. 999, wherein it appeared that a board of county commissioners were exceeding their power in trying road tax defaulters the court in granting an injunction, said: "As the county commissioners are attempting to try defaulters for the non-payment of their road tax, which under the law could only be done by the district road commissioners, the most effective, if not the sole, remedy of the citizens haled before them is to enjoin them from exercising ultra vires powers. This is not an effort to enjoin a court from exercising its proper powers within its jurisdiction, as was the case of Rowland v. Road Com'rs, etc. 133 Ga. 190, 65 S. E. 404, but is a proceeding against certain officials who have no power to convene themselves as a court to try road defaulters, to prevent them from exercising such ultra vires powers." In Martin v. Baldy, 249 Pa. St. 253, 94 Atl. 1091, affirming Martin v. Medical Education, etc. Bureau, 23 Pa. St. Dist. 959, it was held that a person who was prosecuted under a statute regulating the practice of optometry might obtain an injunction. The court said: "A considerable number of persons who assert that they are practicing optometrists within the state, have through their counsel, in writing, expressed their desire to join as parties plaintiff in the present case. Before we take up for consideration what we regard as the principal and most substantial questions in the case, we may as well dispose of two preliminary points which have been raised by counsel. The first is that taken in behalf of the defendants, to the effect that, as a court of equity, we cannot take jurisdiction of the case because of the penal provisions of the statute; in other words, that a court will not enjoin against a criminal prosecution of those who are charged with having committed offenses under the law. It may be conceded without any hesitation, that under ordinary circumstances, where a single individual desires to obtain a decree from a court of equity, to enjoin a proceeding against him in a court of criminal jurisdiction, relief must be denied to him. We regard it as well settled, so well settled as not to require a citation of authorities upon the subject, that, except in cases where a multiplicity of suits would constitute reason for an exception, or where an initial fundamental question of constitutionality or legal right is involved in the case, a court of equity will not intervene, but will leave the plaintiff to have his rights determined in the criminal proceeding. In the present case, however, we have both the elements of a multitude of cases and interests and a serious question of constitutional right and privilege, which the plaintiffs, as it seems to us, have a right to have determined in the first instance, and, if their views of their rights are sustained, to be relieved if the annoyance, expense and the possible prosecution, which might otherwise come to them, if their case cannot now be heard and decided. Their right to practice their occupation is a property right and entitled to protection, unless it is regulated and controlled in a lawful manner." And in Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 36 S. Ct. 7, affirming 219 Fed. 273, in granting an injunction restraining a prosecution under the anti-alien law, it was said: "It is also settled that while a court of equity, generally speaking, has 'no jurisdiction over the prosecution, the punishment, or the pardon of crimes or misdemeanors' (In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 210, 8 S. Ct. 482, 31 U. S. (L. ed.) 402, 405,) a distinction obtains, and equitable jurisdiction exists to restrain criminal prosecutions under unconstitutional enactments, when the prevention of such prosecution is essential to the safeguarding of rights of property. Davis, etc. Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 789 U. S. 207, 218, 23 S. Ct. 498, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 778, 780; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 241, 25 S. Ct. 18, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 169, 177; Ex parte Young [209 U. S. 123, 14 Ann. Cas. 764, 28 S. Ct. 441, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 714, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 932]; Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S. 621, 32 S. Ct. 340, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 577. The right to earn a livelihood and to continue in employment unmolested by efforts to enforce void enactments should similarly be entitled to protection in the absence of adequate remedy at law. It is said that the bill does not show an employment for a term, and that under an employment at will the complainant could be discharged at any time, for any reason or for no reason, the motive of the employer being immaterial. The conclusion, however, that is sought to be drawn, is too broad. The fact that the employment is at the will of the parties, respectively, does not make it one at the will of others. The employee has manifest interest in the freedom of the employer to exercise his judgment without illegal interference or compulsion and, by the weight of authority, the unjustified interference of third persons is actionable although the employment is at will." In Alexander v. Elkins, 132 Tenn. 663, 179 S. W. 310, wherein it appeared that the defendant was threatened with criminal prosecution under a statute already declared to be unconstitutional the court allowed an injunction, distinguishing that situation from one where the unconstitutionality of a statute was asserted and not proven, and saying: "In the case of Kelly v. Conner, 122 Tenn. 339, 396, 123 S. W. 622, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 201, it was said: . . . 'Courts of equity have no jurisdiction to enjoin threatened criminal proceedings under a statute enacted by a state in the exercise of the police power in relation to which the legislature has complete jurisdiction, although it be charged that the statute is invalid, and that a multiplicity of actions thereunder will injure and destroy civil and property rights of the complainants, and that the damages resulting will be irreparable, when the complainant's defense thereto, in a court having jurisdiction of the offense, is adequate and unembarrassed; and we hold that the chancery courts of Tennessee, neither under their inherent nor statutory jurisdiction, have any such power or jurisdiction, whatever may be the exceptions to the general rule in the courts of equity of other jurisdictions.' We adhere to this statement of the law, but it does not apply to prosecutions threatened under acts which have already been adjudged unconstitutional by this court. In Kelly v. Conner that question was not in the mind of the court. There it was sought to enjoin threatened prosecutions under an act which had never been impeached. The bill charged that the act was unconstitutional, and sought to have it so declared. Ample reasons were given in the opinion of the court why such a course of litigation would be inadmissible under the facts presented in that case; but those reasons cannot be held to apply to a spurious prosecution under a supposititious act, already declared and adjudged by the highest judicial authority in the state, in a regular judicial proceeding, to be no true law. A warrant of arrest, charging a party with the violation of such an act, is just as void of efficacy on its face as if it charged a violation of the laws of China or Japan. But if by collusion between an officer of the law and a private citizen, the latter is suffered to procure warrants of arrest, and the purpose is expressed on the part of such private citizen to continue the procurement of such false warrants until he has obtained hundreds of them, if money demanded be not paid, and if the officer of the law agrees to continue to issue them, and to cause the complainant to be arrested on them, until he comply with the unlawful demand to pay money, such citizen is not relieved of the persecution by the fact that the warrants in fact and law charge no crime. He can, it is true, be ultimately relieved when each case is finally brought before the higher courts, but under the allegations of the bill new prosecutions of the same false character will be brought, since, according to the bill, the threats of arrest are made notwithstanding knowledge of the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the act void. It will boot the complainant little that he is sure of overthrowing each new prosecution as it arises. He will suffer the harassment of the repeated interferences with his liberty, the constantly recurring trials, and the accumulating expenses. Under such circumstances the remedy at law is very inadequate. The whole persecution can be ended by the chancery court, through its injunctive power, at one stroke. Why should the court not exercise this power? It is urged that the chancery court has no jurisdiction to interfere with criminal prosecutions, except in the way of protecting property rights already under its care, and sought to be disturbed through the agency of a criminal prosecution by some party to the litigation, or connected with the interests in litigation, thus depriving the court, indirectly, of its control. Some other cases take a wider view of the power of the court to protect property rights against assaults through criminal prosecutions, but even on the stricter view, there can be, as we think, no objection to the bill before us. The chancery court is not asked to invade the jurisdiction of the criminal court. There is no question of guilt or innocence to be tried. Under the case stated there are no controversies to be settled by a criminal court. There is in this state no law under which the acts charged can be held criminal, and hence no crime is charged. None of the evils therefore stand in the way which are to be encountered when the court of chancery attempts to usurp the functions of courts of criminal jurisdiction. There is before us (accepting the bill as true, as must be done on demurrer) simply a bold misuse of criminal process, actual and threatened, to harass a man without any color of legality, and the expression of a purpose to continue this unlawful use indefinitely, through connivance of one of the law officers of the state, to compel complainant to pay money demanded. If there be no precedent for the interference of a court of chancery in such a case it is time one should be made. Certainly the relief sought falls within the general scope of those equitable principles which entitle a citizen to protection against multiplied, repeated, and vexatious suits."

TINGUE

v.

STATE.

Ohio Supreme Court—June 26, 1914.

90 Ohio St. 368; 108 N. E. 222.

False Pretenses — Obtaining Loan.

The word "obtain," as used in section 13104, General Code, is not limited to getting, securing or appropriating money or property as owner. It includes as well the getting or securing of money or property by way of a loan.

[See note at end of this case.]

Indictment — Variance — Surplusage.

Mere matter of unnecessary particularity or immaterial description contained in an indictment is not sufficient upon which to base a charge of variance between pleading and proof. Such variance must be based upon some essential element of the offense or some essential part of such element.

Criminal Law — Harmless Error Rule.

A mistrial should not be ordered in a cause simply because some error has intervened. The error must prejudicially affect the merits of the case and the substantial rights of one or both of the parties, and this is as true of the temporary absence of the judge as any other departure from due process of law during the trial of a cause.

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Court of Appeals, Tuscarawas county.

Criminal action. Edward Tingue convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses and brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Buchanan, Reed & Russell for plaintiff in error.

W. V. Wright for defendant in error.

[368] WANAMAKER, J.—Plaintiff in error was indicted by the grand jury of Tuscarawas county for obtaining money from one Alice M. Ohliger by false pretenses.

[369] The indictment was in the usual form, save and except the false pretenses pleaded and also certain uses to which the money was to be applied. That portion of the indictment relating to the false pretenses charged is in substance as follows: That said Edward W. Tingue, on the 17th day of May, 1910, in the county of Tuscarawas, with the intent unlawfully and feloniously to defraud one Alice M. Ohliger, did then and there unlawfully, feloniously and knowingly falsely pretend to her; the said Alice M. Ohliger, that he, the said Edward W. Tingue, was then and there the owner of a large estate in the state of New York, worth $20,000, from which he received a large annual income; that he, the said Edward W. Tingue, was then and there the owner of other valuable property in the state of New York of the value of $17,000; that he, the said Edward W. Tingue, was then and there the owner of valuable railroad stock in The Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company; that he, the said Edward W. Tingue, was then and there the owner of valuable stock in a woolen mill in the Dominion of Canada, which said woolen mill would be of the value of $1,000,000 when completed, and that he, the said Edward W. Tingue, then and there had the right to sell and dispose of stock of the aforesaid woolen mill; that, by which said false pretenses, then and there made as aforesaid, said Alice M. Ohliger, then and there believing said false pretenses to be true, and relying and acting upon that belief, was induced then and there to and did pay to the said Edward W. Tingue the sum of $1,500 in money of the personal property of the [370] said Alice M. Ohliger to be by him, the said Edward W. Tingue, invested in said woolen mill stock in the name of her, the said Alice M. Ohliger.

It is admitted that the indictment negated the truth of said false pretenses and also charged that said Tingue well knew the said false pretenses to be false at the time of making the same.

A general demurrer was filed to the indictment, which was overruled and the defendant below excepted. A plea of not guilty was then entered and the case proceeded to trial to a jury, resulting in a verdict of guilty. A motion for a new trial, containing some fourteen grounds, was then interposed by the defendant, which motion was by the court overruled, exceptions taken and sentence imposed. Thereupon the case proceeded on error to the court of appeals, which affirmed the judgment below, and to that judgment of affirmance error was prosecuted to this court to reverse the judgment below.

The first question to be determined is, Does the indictment charge the offense of "obtaining money by false pretenses?"

It is elementary that the elements of the offense are provided by the statute.

Section 13104, General Code, reads as follows: "Whoever, by false pretense and with intent to defraud, obtains anything of value or procures the signature of another as maker, indorser or guarantor to a bond, bill, receipt, promissory note, draft, check or other evidence of indebtedness or whoever sells, barterers or disposes of a bond, bill, receipt, promissory note, draft or check or offers so to do, [371] knowing the signature of the maker, indorser or guarantor thereof, to have been obtained by false pretense, if the value of the property or instrument so procured, sold, bartered or disposed of, is thirty-five dollars or more, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years, or, if less than that sum, shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than sixty days, or both."

An examination of the indictment in connection with the statute clearly discloses that every essential element of the offense, both as provided by the statute and numerous decisions thereunder by this court, have been adequately pleaded, and that the demurrer, therefore, was rightly overruled.

Upon the trial the whole transaction between the parties was fully disclosed, both by the prosecuting witness and the other witnesses to the transaction. Upon the evidence the defendant moved for a directed verdict in his favor upon the ground of variance between pleading and proof. That variance he predicates, first, upon the word "obtains." He claims that the evidence clearly shows that the prosecuting witness made the defendant her agent to receive the custody of $1,500 of her money to be invested by him in her name, and that, therefore, he did not acquire title or ownership over said $1,500. However, in order to commit the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses, it is not necessary to acquire title or ownership. One may acquire a mere loan of money by such false pretenses [372] and commit an offense pursuant to the statute. Indeed, it would be a most dangerous doctrine to permit men by falsely and fraudulently representing their financial standing, to secure a loan or credit and then hold that no crime had been committed by false and fraudulent representations.

The word "obtain" means just what it says, to get, to secure possession of. It is used in the ordinary sense and has no technical meaning beyond that.

The second alleged variance is predicated upon the last three or four lines of the indictment, to-wit, "to be by him, the said Edward W. Tingue, invested in said woolen mill stock in the name of her, the said Alice M. Ohliger." The prosecuting witness upon the stand testified that the money was paid to Tingue, not agreeable to this language of the indictment but, upon the contrary, merely as a loan. Whereupon the defendant claims that this was a fatal variance, that the transactions are entirely different and that, therefore, the defendant should have been discharged at the close of the state's evidence. What is a variance as known in criminal law and procedure?

Section 13582, General Code, reads: "When, on the trial of an indictment, there appears to be a variance between the statement in such indictment and the evidence offered in proof thereof, in the christian name or surname, or both or other description of a person therein named or described or in the name or description of a matter or thing therein named or described, such variance shall not be ground for an acquittal of the defendant, unless [373] the court before which the trial is had, finds that such variance is material to the merits of the case or may be prejudicial to the defendant."

The provisions of this section are clear and conclusive, both upon the court and the defendant. The previous section, 13581, General Code, also throws much light upon what are material or immaterial matters in an indictment:

"Sec. 13581. An indictment shall not be invalid, and the trial, judgment or other proceeding stayed, arrested or affected by the omission of the words 'with force and arms,' or words of similar import, or the words 'as appears by the record,' or for omitting to state the time at which the offense was committed, in a case in which time is not of the essence of the offense; or for stating the time imperfectly; or for want of a statement of the value or price of a matter or thing or the amount of damages or injury, where the value or price or the amount of damages or injury is not of the essence of the offense; or for the want of an allegation of the time or place of a material fact, when the time and place have once been stated therein; or that dates and numbers are represented by figures; or for an omission to allege that the grand jurors were impeached, sworn or charged; or for surplussage or repugnant allegation when there is sufficient matter alleged to indicate the crime and person charged; or for want of averment of matter not necessary to be proved; or for other defects or imperfections which do not tend to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits."

[374] Under the proof the trial judge held that the variance claimed was not material to the merits of the case and not prejudicial to the defendant. What is meant by the language "not material to the merits of the case?" Clearly it must relate to matters that need to be pleaded and proved by the state. That is, it relates to the elements of the offense. Mere matter of unnecessary particularity or description, being wholly unnecessary and immaterial, should not affect the "merits of the case," and cannot, therefore, be prejudicial to the defendant.

If the defendant Tingle obtained the money by false pretenses, what possible interest could the state have, or anybody else, for any pleading or proving what he did with the money, because the crime had already been committed? Even had he returned the money to Mrs. Ohliger, the prosecuting witness, it would not wipe out the crime any more than the thief by returning the money could wipe out the theft. The variance relates to a matter of immaterial form rather than a material fact and could, therefore, in no way "prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits."

The court was right in overruling the motion of the defendant based upon the claimed variance between pleading and proof.

One other error is claimed by reason of which the judgment of the court below should be reversed. It is claimed by the defendant, and he has made an affidavit to that effect, that during the trial, while the arguments of counsel were being made, the trial judge was absent from the court room, and that, [375] therefore, under the authority of Miller v. State, 73 Ohio St. 195, 76 N. E. 823, there was a virtual dissolution of the court and a mistrial, for which the defendant was in no way responsible, and that, therefore, he should go acquit. We are entirely content with the doctrine laid down in the Miller case, supra, but it will be noted that the third paragraph of the syllabus reads as follows:

"Where it is shown that a judge during a trial of one accused of murder is so far absent, and for such length of time, as to prevent his control of the conduct of the trial while the prosecuting attorney is making the last argument to the jury, and during such absence that officer, in the hearing of the jury, comments upon matters not in evidence and extraneous to the case, which are calculated to work serious prejudice to the defendant, and accuses the defendant's counsel of conduct apart from the proceedings of the trial of a highly unprofessional or criminal character, such prejudice will be presumed as to require a reversal of the judgment."

The whole doctrine is predicated upon the misconduct of counsel to the prejudice of the defendant during such absence.

The chief purpose of the presence of the judge while the arguments of counsel are being made to the jury is to see to it that the procedure is regular, that the ethics of counsel shall be duly observed, that no unfair or unjust advantage shall be taken by one side as against the other and that, if objection be made to misconduct of any counsel, there shall be a judge present to entertain it and to properly rule upon it.

[376] Now, it is not claimed in this case that there was any misconduct of counsel during the argument nor anything else irregular or erroneous, except the mere temporary absence of the trial judge during a part of the argument and while said trial judge was preparing his charge to the jury. It does not appear from the record that there was any objection to such absence, nor that it resulted prejudicially in anywise to the defendant.

Others errors are complained of, but we do not deem them of sufficient importance to discuss them in detail.

We find no error in the record and the judgment below is, therefore, affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Nichols, C. J., Johnson, Donahue and Newman, JJ., concur. Wilkin, J., not participating.

NOTE.

Obtaining Loan of Money as Constituting Crime of Obtaining Money by False Pretenses.

I. General Rule, 1159.

II. Illustrations of Rule:

1. Statement Concerning Security for Loan, 1160.
2. Statement Concerning Occupation of Borrower, 1160.
3. Statement Concerning Membership in Order, 1160.

4. Statement Concerning Ownership of Property, 1160.
5. Statement in Writing Concerning Financial Ability, 1161.
6. Statement Concerning Supernatural Powers, 1161.
7. Statement Concerning Use to Be Made of Loan, 1161.
8. Statement of Intention to Work Out Loan, 1162.
9. Statement by Bank Officer to Obtain Deposit, 1162.

I. General Rule.

Obtaining a loan of money under a promise to repay it, without other representation, although there is actually no intention to repay it, does not constitute the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. State v. Montgomery, 56 Ia. 195, 9 N. W. 120. But where one obtains a loan of money by means of false pretenses relating to a past or existing fact, he may be convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses.

England.—Reg. v. Ball, C. & M. 249, 41 E. C. L. 140; Reg. v. Stevens, 1 Cox C. C. 83; Reg. v. Meakin, 11 Cox C. C. 270, 20 L. T. N. S. 544, 17 W. R. 683; Reg. v. Burgon, 7 Cox C. C. 131, Dears & B. 11, 25 L. J. M. C. 105, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 596, 4 W. R. 525; Reg. v. Roebuck, 7 Cox C. C. 126, Dears & B. 24, 25 L. J. M. C. 101, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 597, 4 W. R. 514; Reg. v. West, 8 Cox C. C. 12, Dears & B. 573, 27 L. J. M. C. 227, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 514, 6 W. R. 506; Reg. v. Archer, 6 Cox C. C. 515, Dears 449, 3 C. L. R. 623, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 479; Reg. v. Villeneuve, 2 East P. C. 830; Rex v. Carpenter, 22 Cox C. C. 618, 76 J. P. 158; Reg. v. Crosseley, 2 M. & R. 17, 2 Lewin C. C. 164.

Canada.—Reg. v. Huppel, 21 U. C. Q. B. 281.

California.—People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. 773, 56 Am. Rep. 73.

Colorado.—Clarke v. People, 53 Colo. 214, 125 Pac. 113.

Delaware.—State v. Nichols, Houst. Crim. Cas. 114.

Florida.—Morris v. State, 54 Fla. 80, 14 Ann. Cas. 285, 45 So. 456.

Georgia.—Branham v. State, 96 Ga. 307, 22 S. E. 957; Williams v. State, 105 Ga. 606, 31 S. E. 546; Brown v. State, 6 Ga. App. 329, 64 S. E. 1001.

Illinois.—Berkensfield v. People, 191 Ill. 272, 61 N. E. 96; Lucas v. People, 75 Ill. App. 662.

Indiana.—Casily v. State, 32 Ind. 62; Strong v. State, 86 Ind. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 292.

Iowa.—State v. Montgomery, 56 Ia. 195, 9 N. W. 120; State v. Fooks, 65 Ia. 196, 452, 21 N. W. 561, 773. See also State v. Hollingsworth, 132 Ia. 471, 109 N. W. 1003.

Kentucky.—Com. v. Schwartz, 92 Ky. 510, 18 S. W. 775, 36 Am. St. Rep. 609.

Massachusetts.—Com. v. Lincoln, 11 Allen 233; Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481.

Michigan.—People v. Oscar, 105 Mich. 704, 63 N. W. 971; People v. Segal, 180 Mich. 316, 146 N. W. 644.

Missouri.—State v. Hubbard, 170 Mo. 346, 70 S. W. 883; State v. McBrien, 265 Mo. 594, 178 S. W. 489.

New York.—Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351; People v. Aronson, 156 N. Y. S. 396.

Ohio.—See the reported case.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Hutchinson, 1 Pr. L. J. Rep. 302, 2 Pa. L. J. 250; Com. v. Lundberg, 18 Phila. 482, 43 Leg. Int. 260; Com. v. Wallace, 114 Pa. St. 410, 6 Atl. 685, 60 Am. Rep. 353.

If a loan of money is obtained by false pretenses, an intent to defraud exists, even though the borrower intends to repay the money. Rex v. Carpenter, 22 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 618, 76 J. P. 158; Com. v. Schwartz, 92 Ky. 510, 18 S. W. 775, 36 Am. St. Rep. 609. And the fact that he has good reason to believe that he will be able to repay the money is no defense, if the loan is obtained by false pretenses. Rex v. Carpenter, supra. In that case the court said: "If the defendant made statements of fact which he knew to be untrue, and made them for the purpose of inducing persons to deposit with him money which he knew they would not deposit but for their belief in the truth of his statements, and if he was intending to use the money so obtained for purposes different from those for which he knew the depositors understood from his statements that he intended to use it, then, gentlemen, we have the intent to defraud, although he may have intended to repay the money if he could, and although he may have honestly believed, and may even have had good reason to believe, that he would be able to repay it."

Likewise, actual repayment of a loan does not exonerate a person who has obtained the loan by false pretenses. Williams v. State, 105 Ga. 606, 31 S. E. 546. And see the reported case.

The fact that the money is loaned for an illegal purpose, has been held to be no defense to a prosecution for obtaining the loan by false pretenses. Casily v. State, 32 Ind. 62.

II. Illustrations of Rule.

1. STATEMENT CONCERNING SECURITY FOR LOAN.

The crime of obtaining money by false pretenses is committed by one who procures a loan of money by reason of fraudulent misrepresentations concerning the security on which the money is loaned. Reg. v. Burgon, 7 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 131, Dears & B. 11, 25 L. J. M. C. 105, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 596, 4 W. R. 525; Reg. v. Meakin, 11 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 270, 20 L. T. N. S. 544, 17 W. R. 683; Reg. v. Huppel, 21 U. C. Q. B. 281; People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. 773, 56 Am. Rep. 73; Morris v. State, 54 Fla. 80, 14 Ann. Cas. 285, 45 So. 456; Brown v. State, 6 Ga. App. 329, 64 S. E. 1001; Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481; Com. v. Lincoln, 11 Allen (Mass.) 233; People v. Oscar, 105 Mich. 704, 63 N. W. 971; State v. Hubbard, 170 Mo. 346, 70 S. W. 883. Thus, it has been held that a person is guilty of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses where he misrepresents the value of bonds which he offers as security for a loan. People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. 773, 56 Am. Rep. 73, or where he procures a loan of money by giving a mortgage on property which he does not own. See the note to Morris v. State, 14 Ann. Cas. 285.

One may be guilty of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, in obtaining a loan from a pawnbroker by reason of false pretenses concerning the pledge he offers as a security. Reg. v. Stevens, 1 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 83; Reg. v. Roebuck, 7 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 126, Dears & B. 24, 25 L. J. M. C. 101, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 597, 4 W. R. 514. See also Reg. v. Ball, C. & M. 249, 41 E. C. L. 140. Thus where a person had been in the habit of pledging and redeeming certain ingots of silver, which had been tested and found genuine, it was held that he was guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, where he obtained a loan on ingots of worthless metal by pretending that they were the genuine silver ingots which he had previously pawned. Reg. v. Stevens, 1 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 83. It has been held that though no reliance is placed on the prisoner's statement as to the value of the pledge, and a loan is not made by reason of tests made by the pawnbroker, the prisoner may be convicted of an attempt to commit the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Reg. v. Roebuck, 7 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 126, Dears & B. 24, 25 L. J. M. C. 101, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 597, 4 W. R. 514; Reg. v. Ball, C. & M. 249, 41 E. C. L. 140. However, it has been held that one is not guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses where he obtains a loan of money by reason of "puffing" or exaggerated statements concerning the value of the pledge. Reg. v. Bryan, 7 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 312, Dears & B. 265, 26 L. J. M. C. 84, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 620, 5 W. R. 598; Reg. v. Lee, 8 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 233.

2. STATEMENT CONCERNING OCCUPATION OF BORROWER.

A person may be guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, where he obtains a loan of money by reason of false statements concerning his occupation. Reg. v. Fry, 7 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 394, Dears & B. 449, 27 L. J. M. C. 68, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 266, 6 W. R. 245; Rex v. Villeneuve, 2 East. P. C. (Eng.) 830; Branham v. State, 96 Ga. 307, 22 S. E. 957; Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351. Thus, the crime is committed where a loan of money is obtained by reason of a false statement that one keeps a shop. Reg. v. Fry, 7 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 394, Dears & B. 449, 27 L. J. M. C. 68, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 266, 6 W. R. 245; or is in the employment of a certain person, Rex v. Villeneuve, 2 East P. C. (Eng.) 830; or has been in the employment of a certain person and has money due him, Branham v. State, 96 Ga. 307, 22 S. E. 957; or is a chaplain in the army, and is a friend of a certain person, Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351.

3. STATEMENT CONCERNING MEMBERSHIP IN ORDER.

It has been held that a person who obtains a loan of money by falsely representing that he is a member of a certain order, is guilty of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Strong v. State, 86 Ind. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 292.

4. STATEMENT CONCERNING OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

One who obtains a loan of money by falsely representing that he is the owner of valuable property may be convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Williams v. State, 105 Ga. 606, 31 S. E. 546; Casily v. State, 32 Ind. 62; People v. Segal, 180 Mich. 316, 146 N. W. 644; State v. McBrien, 265 Mo. 594, 178 S. W. 489; Tingue v. State, 90 Ohio St. 368, 108 N. E. 222; Com. v. Hutchinson, 1 Pa. L. J. Rep. 302, 2 Pa. L. J. 250; Com. v. Lundberg, 18 Phila. 482, 43 Leg. Int. 260. Thus where it appeared that a person borrowed one hundred dollars by falsely representing that he had just bought a railroad and needed the money to finish paying for it, it was held that he was guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses. Williams v. State, 105 Ga. 606, 31 S. E. 546. Likewise, where it appeared that a loan was obtained by a false representation that the prisoner owned three carloads of potatoes and needed five hundred dollars to complete the deal, the prisoner was held to be guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses. People v. Segal, 180 Mich. 316, 146 N. W. 644. And where a loan was obtained by a false representation that the prisoner had funds in the hands of a guardian, and would procure money from his mother to repay the loan, a conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses was sustained. Com. v. Hutchinson, 1 Pa. L. J. Rep. 302, 2 Pa. L. J. 250.

Where a person obtained a loan of money by falsely representing that he was the owner of three saloons, it was held that he was guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, even though he actually owned one saloon, and the fact that he thought the other saloons belonged to him by reason of their being his wife's property, would not exonerate him. Com. v. Lundberg, 18 Phila. (Pa.) 482, 43 Leg. Int. 260.

5. STATEMENT IN WRITING CONCERNING FINANCIAL ABILITY.

Under statutes making it a crime to obtain credit by means of a false statement in writing concerning one's financial ability, a person may be convicted where he obtains a loan of money by means of a false statement in writing concerning his financial ability. Berkenfield v. People, 191 Ill. 272, 61 N. E. 96; Lucas v. People, 75 Ill. App. 662; People v. Aronson, 156 N. Y. S. 396. Thus, where a husband discounted a note indorsed by his wife, by means of a false statement from the wife concerning her financial ability, it was held that both the husband and the wife were guilty of the statutory crime of obtaining property by use of a false statement and that they could have been convicted of larceny in obtaining money by means of false pretenses. People v. Aronson, supra, wherein the court said: "The defendant's counsel claims the section cannot apply to Harry Aronson, as he made no false statement regarding his own liability, but that of another; second, that it cannot apply to Ida Aronson, as she received no money benefit. Taken apart, this section reads: 'Who shall knowingly cause to be made any false statement, in writing, with intent that it shall be relied upon respecting the financial condition of any other person for whom he is acting, for the purpose of procuring a loan or discount of a promissory note for the benefit of himself, is guilty of a misdemeanor.' The defendant Harry Aronson is directly within this provision, as in presenting the statement of Ida Aronson to the bank he was acting for her, and in consequence received the money. As to Ida Aronson, the section would read: 'Any person who shall make any false statement, in writing, with intent that it shall be relied upon respecting the financial condition of herself for the purpose of procuring the discount of a promissory note, for the benefit of herself, is guilty of a misdemeanor.' 'Benefit,' as used in this section, does not mean that the person must necessarily receive the money, for it includes credit extended to an indorser upon the strength of his statement. An indorser receives benefit from the bank when, in reliance upon his signature and upon his financial statement, the bank extends credit to him by advancing money to another. An indorsement virtually means the giving of the money by the bank to the indorser, who, in turn, pays it over to the maker. By a short cut and means of credit and bookkeeping, the actual money is paid to the maker, instead of indirectly through the indorser. Thus, the indorser receives the benefit."

A member of a firm has been held to be guilty of obtaining credit by means of a false written statement concerning his financial ability, where he obtained a loan of money to the firm by means of a false written statement concerning the financial ability of the firm. Berkenfield v. People, 191 Ill. 272, 61 N. E. 96.

However, it has been said that where a person secured the rediscount of a note by means of a false statement concerning the maker's financial ability, there could be no conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses for the reason that the money had been given and the credit obtained prior to the making of the false representations. Opinion of Brooke, J., in People v. Johnson (Mich.) 156 N. W. 449.

6. STATEMENT CONCERNING SUPERNATURAL POWERS.

Where an alleged seer induced a woman to loan money to him by falsely representing that it was necessary to keep others from getting it, it was held that he was rightly convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses. Clarke v. People, 53 Colo. 214, 125 Pac. 113.

7. STATEMENT CONCERNING USE TO BE MADE OF LOAN.

Under the rule that the false pretenses must relate to a past or existing fact, and that the crime is not committed where the inducement is a promise to perform some act in the future, a person is not guilty of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses where he obtains a loan of money solely by means of false pretenses concerning the use to be made of the money. Reg. v. Lee, 9 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 304; L. & C. 309, 8 L. T. N. S. 437, 11 W. R. 761; Reg. v. Woodman, 14 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 179, 28 Moak 561; Com. v. Lundberg, 18 Phila. 482, 43 Leg. Int. 260. Thus it has been held that a person was not guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses where the false pretense relied on was the statement that the loan was to be used to pay rent. Reg. v. Lee, 9 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 304, L. & C. 309, 8 L. T. N. S. 437, 11 W. R. 761. And it has been held that a person was not guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses where the facts showed that he obtained the loan by the statement that he intended to open a public house. Reg. v. Woodman, 14 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 179, 28 Moak 561.

However, where a loan of money is obtained by means of a false statement concerning an existing or past fact, the fact that there is also coupled with such a false statement, a false statement concerning the use the borrower intends to make of the loan, does not prevent a conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses. Reg. v. West, 8 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 12, Dears & B. 575, 27 L. J. M. C. 227, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 514, 6 W. R. 506; State v. Nichols, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 114; State v. Montgomery, 56 Ia. 195, 9 N. W. 120. See also Smith v. State, 116 Ga. 587, 42 S. E. 766; State v. Fooks, 65 Ia. 196, 452, 21 N. W. 561, 773. Thus, where a borrower falsely stated that he owned certain goods and wanted the loan to pay freight, he was held to be guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses. State v. Montgomery, 56 Ia. 195, 9 N. W. 120. And a person has been held to be guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, where he obtained a loan of money by the false statement that he had bought certain skins, and would sell them to the prosecutor. Reg. v. West, 8 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 12, Dears & B. 575, 27 L. J. M. C. 227, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 514, 6 W. R. 506.

It has been held that a false representation by a person that he wants the loan in order to make a loan to another, imports a false representation as to an existing fact. State v. Nichols, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 114.

8. STATEMENT OF INTENTION TO WORK OUT LOAN.

Under the rule that the false pretenses must relate to a past or existing fact, it has been held that a person cannot be convicted of being a common cheat and swindler, by reason of the fact that he obtains a loan of money by means of a promise to work out the loan, and later refuses to do so. Ryan v. State, 45 Ga. 128.

9. STATEMENT BY BANK OFFICER TO OBTAIN DEPOSIT.

Where an official of a bank obtains a deposit of money by means of false statements concerning the solvency of the bank, he may be convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Rex v. Carpenter, 22 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 618, 76 J. P. 158; Com. v. Schwartz, 92 Ky. 510, 18 S. W. 775, 36 Am. St. Rep. 609; Com. v. Wallace, 114 Pa. St. 410, 6 Atl. 685, 60 Am. Rep. 353.

HOGAN

v.

NASHVILLE INTERURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Tennessee Supreme Court—March 20, 1916.

131 Tenn. 244; 174 S. W. 1118.

Carriers of Passengers — Refusal to Carry Disabled Person.

Any person is entitled to be received as a passenger on payment of fare, notwithstanding a seeming incapacity on his part to take care of himself, if, in fact, he is competent to travel alone without requiring other care than that which the law requires a carrier to bestow on all persons alike. The disability which will disentitle a person to transportation may be mental or physical, and in respect to physical disability the carrier is under no obligation to receive as a passenger one who, without an attendant, is unable because of extreme age or tender years to care for himself, and the same test applies as to other physical disabilities.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A man about 26 years of age, who has always had to walk with two crutches, but who for 10 years has continuously traveled alone and unattended in trains, street cars, etc., and who only requires ordinary care, cannot be excluded from a passenger train on the ground of his physical disabilities.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Acts 1875, c. 130 (Shannon's Code, § 3046), abrogating the common-law rule as to rights of action for exclusion from public conveyances, and declaring that no carrier of passengers need carry or admit any person whom it chose not to, was abrogated by Acts 1897, c. 10, § 14, declaring all corporations, etc., operating railroads to be "common carriers," which term depends upon whether the carrier may determine who he will carry or whether he is bound to carry all alike, and which, under Acts 1907, c. 433, declaring that any incorporated interurban railroad company shall have the same powers and privileges as railroad companies, subject to the same duties and obligations, includes an interurban street-railway company.

[See note at end of this case.]

Enforcement of Right to Carriage — Infraction.

A complaint alleging that a common carrier's refusal to accept complainant was a persecution of complainant for having brought a suit for damages against it and an attempted intimidation shows a palpable abuse of a public franchise, which a court of equity will enjoin.

Same.

A complaint alleging that a common carrier had wrongfully refused to accept complainant as a passenger and threatened to continue such wrongful act sets out a right to relief by injunction, on the ground that a single action is a more adequate remedy than an action or actions at law for damages.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Davidson county: ALLISON, Judge.

Action by Woodall Hogan, plaintiff, against Nashville Interurban Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Fitzgerald Hall for appellant.

Pitts & McConico for appellee.

[246] WILLIAMS, J.—This case stands for trial on bill of complaint and a demurrer thereto; the appeal being that of complainant, Hogan, from a decree of the chancery court of Davidson county sustaining the demurrer.

The complainant in his bill alleges that he is about twenty-six years of age, and resides near the city of Nashville; that he is a student and instructor in Vanderbilt University, in that city, and has been accustomed to use the cars of the defendant company almost daily since the line of that company was constructed for transportation into the city; that he has since infancy been lame as a result of infantile paralysis, and has been forced to walk ever since with two crutches; that for the last ten years he has continually traveled alone and unattended, riding trains, street cars, interurban [247] cars, and goes everywhere a sound and healthy man can go; that in the use of defendant company's cars he was never injured but once, and that then his injury was due to the gross negligence of the servants of defendant; that in so riding he has never caused any trouble, or asked or received any assistance; that he "acts as other passengers, and has been treated as such;" that when ordinary care is exercised "there is no more danger of injuring him than any other person;" that, following the injury above referred to, complainant brought suit against defendant; that thereafter rumors reached him that the defendant was about to withdraw from him the right of passage on its cars; that yet later a communication was received by him from the company's general manager, as follows:

"Nashville, Tenn., April 23, 1914.

"Mr. Woodall Hogan, R. F. D. No. 2, Brentwood, Tenn.—Dear Sir: We regret to notify you that on and after May 1, 1914, we will decline to convey you as a passenger on our line, unless you are at all times accompanied by an attendant. Your physical infirmity is of such a nature as to cause a continued source of possible injury to yourself and as a possible liability as against us. You are also advised that our trainmen and ticket agents will be notified not to receive you as a passenger unless you are accompanied by an attendant. We regret that conditions are such as require [248] this action but deem it necessary, as well for your protection as for the protection of ourselves.

"Very truly yours,

"[Signed] Meade Frierson,
"General Manager."

The bill of complaint further recites: That on May 1, 1914, complainant, tendering the usual fare, demeaning himself properly and offering to comply with all the usual and necessary conditions to become a passenger, presented himself to defendant for carriage on its line, but was absolutely refused; that in his work he is compelled to go into Nashville every day, and that his only means of transportation is defendant's line; that defendant is a common carrier.

That the refusal to receive him as a passenger is a persecution of complainant for not dropping the above-mentioned suit and an attempted intimidation, with a view to forcing him to abandon his legal rights, and arbitrary and in violation of defendant's charter.

The demurrer interposed set out the following grounds:

(1) That the bill discloses such physical infirmity on the part of complainant as that it was not a part of defendant's duty at common law to receive him for passage.

(2) That by force of a valid statute defendant had a right to decline to carry complainant for any reason whatever deemed sufficient by it.

[249] (3) That there is no case made for resort to injunctive process; complainant having an ample remedy at law.

The chancellor sustained the several grounds of the demurrer.

The rule, broadly stated, is that any person desiring transportation shall be entitled to be received as a passenger on payment of the fare, notwithstanding a seeming incapacity on his part to take care of himself, if, in point of fact, he "is competent to travel alone without requiring other care than that which the law requires the carrier to bestow on all persons alike." Hutchison on Carriers (3d ed.) section 966.

In the application of the rule to concrete instances the authorities are not in exact agreement, but the points of difference are narrow ones.

The disability claimed to disqualify may be mental or physical. Thus, while a common carrier may not lawfully refuse absolutely to carry persons who are insane, it may do so where the proposing passenger is not properly attended or guarded. Owens v. Macon, etc. R. Co. 119 Ga. 230, 46 S. E. 87, 63 L.R.A. 946; Meyer v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. 54 Fed. 116, 10 U. S. App. 677, 4 C. C. A. 221.

In respect to physical disability, the carrier is not under obligation to receive as a passenger a person who without an attendant is unable, because of extreme age or tender years, to care for himself; and the same test applies to other physical limitations. The carrier may [250] refuse to carry unless the applicant be in charge of one fit to serve as attendant.

The clearest and most comprehensive statement of the rules governing is that of the supreme court of Mississippi in a series of cases dealing with blind persons who offered themselves for passage. Blindness is by that court held to be prima facie a disqualification; that presumably the affliction of blindness unfits a person for sale travel by railway, if unaccompanied; that a showing of experience or ability to travel alone on the part of the offerer brought to the knowledge of the railroad company's agent may serve as a basis of liability on the part of the carrier for a refusal to accept him.

That court, on a point pertinent to the case in hand, said:

"We are asked to hold that a regulation that no blind person whatever shall travel unaccompanied by an assistant, no matter how skillful or expert a traveler he may have been, or may be, and no matter how perfectly qualified in every other respect to travel on cars unaccompanied, is a reasonable rule. This cannot be sound. Each case must depend on its own facts, and the reasonableness of the refusal to sell the blind person a ticket must, on principle, depend, not on a universal, arbitrary, and indiscriminating rule like this one, but on the capacity to travel unaccompanied of the particular blind person."

It was therefore held, where a blind person sued, and in his declaration averred that for several years he had [251] traveled on defendant company's cars in the transaction of current business, and had never given cause of complaint to any of its servants, and that no objection had been offered to his riding on the company's train before the date of the exclusion complained of, that this statement of his cause of action was not demurrable, the court holding that it was sufficiently shown that plaintiff was able to take care of himself as a passenger. Zachery v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. 74 Miss. 520, 21 So. 246, 36 L.R.A. 546, 60 Am. St. Rep. 529; Zachery v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. 75 Miss. 746, 23 So. 434, 41 L.R.A. 385, 65 Am. St. Rep. 617; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith, 85 Miss. 349, 37 So. 643, 70 L.R.A. 642, 107 Am. St. Rep. 293. And see, also, Illinois Central R. Co. v. Allen, 121 Ky. 138, 89 S. W. 150, 11 Ann. Cas. 970.

We have not been cited any case that deals with a disability claimed to exist because of lameness or infirmity of the two lower limbs, making the use of crutches necessary. But we think it clear that the reasoning in behalf of disqualification of such a person for acceptance must be less obvious than in the case of a blind person. It is a matter of common knowledge that, where a man is deprived of the use of his lower limbs, the enforced constant use of his arms increases their strength, enabling him, especially in the case of a youth, to handle himself with considerable facility and safety on crutches. Such persons are seldom attended, and seldom need to be. To deny the right to be so carried to such as complainant is shown to be by the bill of complaint would be to put an unwarranted handicap on [252] a class of men capable of being serviceable to society, and therefore on society itself, which the defendant company, if a common carrier, is under obligation to serve.

We readily decline to give assent to the contention of the railway company that, as a proposition of law, a man may be denied passage merely because fate has placed on him the necessity of using two crutches in locomotion; and we hold that the bill of complaint makes a case of improper exclusion of Hogan.

But it is insisted by the defendant company that it is not under the common-law duty of a common carrier in respect of the matter of accepting complainant as a passenger. This contention is based on a statute passed by the legislature of this State in 1875, doubtless to operate by way of a hedge against the enforcement of the "Civil Rights Bill" passed by the congress of the United States, which bill at that date had not been declared unconstitutional by the supreme court of the United States.

Acts 1875, ch. 130 (Shannon's Code, section 3046), is as follows:

"The rule of the common law giving a right of action to any person excluded from any hotel, or public means of transportation, or place of amusement, is hereby abrogated: and hereafter no keeper of any hotel, or public house, or carrier of passengers for hire, or conductors, drivers, or employees of such carrier or keeper, shall be bound, or under any obligation to entertain, carry, or admit any person whom he shall, for any reason [253] whatever, choose not to entertain, carry, or admit to his house, hotel, carriage, or means of transportation, or place of amusement; nor shall any right exist in favor of any such person so refused admission, but the right of such keepers of hotels and public houses, carriers of passengers, and keepers of places of amusement and their employees to control the access and admission or exclusion of persons to or from their public houses, means of transportation, and places of amusement, shall be as perfect and complete as that of any private person over his private house, carriage, or private theater, or places of amusement for his family."

On the other hand, it is urged by complainant that, if this act be constitutional, it was impliedly repealed by a later statute (Acts 1897, ch. 10), which undertakes to regulate railroads as carriers of passengers and freight. In section 14 of this last-named act it is provided that all corporations, trustees, receivers, and lessees operating railroads in this State are declared to be common carriers. A later section makes it unlawful for any corporation to subject any person to and undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage.

We are of opinion that, if the defendant company be a railroad within the meaning of this statute, it, along with commercial railroads, was classed as, and operated by the last-quoted statute with the duties of, a common carrier.

What, then, is the necessary import of the statutory phrase declaring railroad companies to be "common carriers?"

[254] "'Common,' in its legal sense, used as a description of the carrier and his duty and the correlative right of the public, contains the whole doctrine of the common law on the subject. The defendants are common carriers. That is all that need be said. All beyond that can be no more than an explanation or application of the legal meaning of 'common' in that connection." McDuffee v. Portland, etc. R. Co. 52 N. H. 430, 457, 13 Am. Rep. 72; Indianapolis Traction, etc. Co. v. Lawson, 143 Fed. 834, 74 C. C. A. 630, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 721, 6 Ann. Cas. 666.

The true test of the character of a party, as to whether he is a common carrier or not, is his legal duty and obligation with reference to transportation. Is it optional with him whether he will or will not carry; or must he carry for all? If it be his legal duty to carry for all alike, then he is subject to all those stringent rules which, for wise ends, have long since been adopted and uniformly enforced, both in England and all the States, upon common carriers. Piedmont Mfg. Co. v. Columbia, etc. R. Co. 19 S. C. 353, 364.

This court, in McGregor v. Gill, 114 Tenn. 521, 86 S. W. 318, 108 Am. St. Rep. 919, in drawing the distinction between public or common carriers and private carriers, said that a common carrier of passengers is one who undertakes for hire to carry all passengers indifferently who may apply for passage.

The result of the declaration in the act of 1879 was to place on railroad companies at least the burdens of common carriers as those burdens are defined and prescribed [255] by the common law. No longer may that particular class of carriers claim the benefit of the act of 1875 abrogating the rule of the common law touching the acceptance of those offering to become passengers.

But is the defendant, an interurban railway company, to be treated as being in the class with ordinary trunk or commercial railroad companies thus regulated? Here, again, the legislature has given the answer.

By Acts 1907, ch. 433, it is provided that any interurban railroad company incorporated under the laws of this State shall have and possess the same powers and privileges as are conferred by the general incorporation act upon railroad companies, and subject to the same general duties and obligations. The classification thus made by our legislature is in line with a strong tendency manifested by the courts of several States to judicially declare interurban railroads to belong to this class. Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Milwaukee R. Co. 95 Wis. 561, 70 N. W. 678, 37 L.R.A. 856, 60 Am. St. Rep. 136; Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co. 117 Ky. 146, 4 Ann. Cas. 445, 77 S. W. 674, 63 L.R.A. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230; Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Jacobs, 92 Ala. 187, 9 So. 320, 12 L.R.A. 830; Katzenberger v. Lawo, 90 Tenn. 238, 16 S. W. 611, 13 L.R.A. 185, 25 Am. St. Rep. 681.

We come now to the consideration of complainant's right to the remedy of injunction by which to restrain defendant company from excluding him from its passenger cars.

[256] It is said in 6 Pom. Eq. Juris. section 623, that a writ of injunction, sometimes even mandatory in form, is granted to compel a carrier to transport freight or to furnish proper transportation facilities, and that unjust and illegal discrimination on the part of public service corporations may be so relieved against, and our case of Memphis News Pub. Co. v. Southern R. Co. 110 Tenn. 684, 75 S. W. 941, 63 L.R.A. 150, is cited.

In that case the bill of complaint was one for injunctive process to compel a common carrier to desist from discrimination, but the form of the injunction sought is not disclosed in the opinion, and it does not discuss that phase of the litigation; any disposition of the point being sub silentio.

However, in Coe v. Louisville, etc. R. Co. (C. C.) 3 Fed. 775, Baxter, circuit judge, held that even a mandatory injunction was grantable to require a railroad company defendant to extend transportation facilities to complainant; and see Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. New York, etc. R. Co. (C. C.) 24 Fed. 516; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Burlington, etc. R. Co. (C. C.) 34 Fed. 481.

In several cases injunctions were granted to compel a public service corporation defendant to furnish a supply of gas, water, etc., to the complainant, which supply had been wrongfully cut off. Whiteman v. Fayette Fuel-Gas Co. 139 Pa. St. 492, 20 Atl. 1062; Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Pittsburg, etc. Coal Co. 111 Ky. 960, 64 S. W. 969, 55 L.R.A. 601, 98 Am. St. Rep. 447; Bourke v. Olcott Water Co. 84 Vt. 126, 78 Atl. 715, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1017, Ann. Cas. 1912D 108.

[257] These cases relate to the protection of a complainant in his property rights. We are cited no case which approves of the issuance of injunctive process to protect one in his right to be accepted and carried as a passenger by a public carrier; but we have not that bald question to decide.

The bill of complaint presents two phases in its allegations which, if sustained by proof to the satisfaction of a chancellor, might warrant the award of an interlocutory injunction:

First, it is alleged that the carrier's refusal to accept complainant for carriage is a persecution of complainant for having brought a suit for damages against the company and in attempted intimidation. This would, if established, evidence a palpable abuse of a public franchise that a court of equity should not hesitate to restrain by the exercise of its highest prerogative with promptitude.

Again, it is shown by the bill of complaint that the carrier threatens to continue the wrongful acts described therein. The modern authorities make it manifest that the rules of equity have grown less strict in respect to interference by a court of equity by way of injunction to restrain repeated wrongful acts, and even purely mandatory injunctions are now granted on clear showing made, where a defendant is guilty of a continuing wrong or threatens repeated perpetration of wrongs which would for remedy at law give rise to a multiplicity of suits, pending the determination of [258] which the wrongs would continue. If a threatened wrong consists of a single act, which will be temporary in effect, the complainant may well be left to his remedy at law for damages. But if persistent repetition of a wrong is threatened, especially by a quasi public corporation involving discrimination as between citizens, equity will move to afford in a single action its more adequate remedy of injunction. Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting, etc. Club, 153 Mich. 185, 116 N. W. 992, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1236, 126 Am. St. Rep. 474, 15 Ann. Cas. 706; Colliton v. Oxberough, 86 Minn. 361, 90 N. W. 793; Ladd v. Osborne, 79 Ia. 93, 44 N. W. 235; 1 High on Injunctions, 5.

Here the remedy sought may be by an injunction prohibitory in form operating on future conduct, and not, strictly speaking, to restore a status by undoing a past act, and when this may be done a court of equity is less chary in exercising the power. It should, of course, in granting interlocutory injunctions of this character, act only after each party, complainant and defendant, has had an opportunity to present his case by affidavits, in an effort by the court to prevent an abuse of its process.

Deeming the bill of complaint to be framed in a manner that will admit of such procedure and relief, we are of opinion that the court below erred in sustaining this and the several grounds of demurrer interposed by the defendant company, and discussed in this opinion.

[259] Reversed, with remand to the court below for further proceedings not inconsistent with the rulings herein embodied.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that a carrier is not entitled to refuse as a passenger a person suffering from a physical disability, as long as he is able to travel without requiring other care than that which the carrier is required to bestow on all passengers. Applying that rule it is held that a person who is unable to walk without the use of two crutches but who, by the use thereof, has been accustomed for years to travel without requiring special attendance, cannot lawfully be refused passage on a railroad train, and if the refusal is persistent and continued he is entitled to relief in equity. The duty of a carrier to receive for carriage a feeble or infirm person is discussed in the notes to Illinois Central R. Co. v. Allen, 11 Ann. Cas. 970; Connora v. Cunard Steamship Co. 17 Ann. Cas. 1051; and Illinois Central R. Co. v. Smith, 107 Am. St. Rep. 293, 302. The duty to receive as a passenger a person afflicted with a contagious disease is considered in the notes to Pullman Car Co. v. Krauss, 8 Ann. Cas. 218; and Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith, supra. See also note to Jenkins v. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. 11 Ann. Cas. 967, as to the effect on that duty of an express contract to carry a person so afflicted.

The cases discussing the duty and liability of a carrier to a passenger taken sick during transit are reviewed in the notes to Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Madden, 21 Ann. Cas. 1077, and Middleton v. Whitridge, Ann. Cas. 1916C 856; and those dealing with the duty of a carrier to an insane passenger are collected in the note to Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Brewer, Ann. Cas. 1913D 151. The right of a carrier to eject a sick passenger for non-payment of fare is discussed in the note to Buckley v. Hudson Valley R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1915D 143.

LINDSEY

v.

STATE.

Florida Supreme Court—October 28, 1913.

66 Fla. 341; 63 So. 332.

Confessions — Effect of Intoxication.

Intoxication, less than mania, does not exclude a confession made during its continuance, but is a fact for the jury tending to discredit such confession.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Santa Rosa county: WOLFE, Judge.

Criminal action. Arch Lindsey convicted of manslaughter and brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

J. T. Wiggins for plaintiff in error.

T. F. West and O. O. Andrews for defendant in error.

[341] TAYLOR, J.—The plaintiff in error, hereinafter referred to as the defendant, on an indictment charging him with murder in the first degree, was convicted, in the Circuit Court of Santa Rosa County, of manslaughter, and from the judgment and sentence imposed takes writ of error here.

[342] One David Mitchell as a witness for the State testified that he arrested the defendant after the tragedy, and found him in a very drunken condition, so that he had to lift him into a buggy to take him off; that while in this condition the defendant, without any threats or holding out of any promises or hope of reward or advantage to himself, freely and voluntarily and of his own volition, told him that he had shot the deceased and had shot him under the shoulder; that he, the witness, told him he thought that he had missed him, to which the defendant replied: "I didn't miss him, I shot him right under the shoulder; about the time I pulled the trigger he turned." The witness further stated that the defendant was so drunk he had to hold him in the buggy, but had intelligence enough to make the above statements to him, and made them on his own initiative and of his own volition without any threats from him or inducements or hope of advantage being held out to him. The defendant here, by his counsel, moved the court to strike this evidence relative to the statements made to the witness by the defendant because there was an inducement when the witness told the defendant that the deceased had been missed; but the court denied this motion, to which exception was taken and this ruling constitutes the first assignment of error. There was no error here. As to the specific ground upon which the motion to strike was based, viz.: that because the witness told the defendant he thought he had missed the deceased, that this was an inducement held out to the defendant, we fail to see how this can be construed into any inducement to the defendant to talk. It may have pricked his vanity over his skill in the use of a rifle to have it intimated that he had missed his target, but in the sense [343] contemplated by the rule of law that to make a confession admissible there must be no inducement held out to the accused for such confession, this cannot by any process of legitimate reasoning be contorted into an inducement such as the rule of evidence inhibits. It is contended here in support of this assignment that the defendant was shown by this witness to have been very badly intoxicated when these statements were made by him, and that therefore his statements could not have been freely and voluntarily made. The rule of law seems to be well settled that the drunken condition of an accused when making a confession, unless such drunkenness goes to the extent of mania, does not affect the admissibility in evidence of such confession, but may affect its weight and credibility with the jury. State v. Berry, 50 La. Ann. 1309, 24 So. 329. Intoxication, less than mania, does not exclude a confession made during its continuance, but it is a fact for the jury tending to discredit such confession. State v. Hogan, 117 La. 863, 42 So. 352; Lester v. State, 32 Ark. 727; Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 30; State v. Grear, 28 Minn. 426, 10 N. W. 472, 41 Am. Rep. 296; Com. v. Howe, 9 Gray (Mass.) 110; Mixon v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 66, 35 S. W. 394; White v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. 625, 25 S. W. 784; People v. Kent, 41 Misc. 191, 83 N. Y. S. 948; State v. Feltes, 51 Ia. 495, 1 N. W. 755.

The defendant as a witness on his own behalf, after testifying that he and the deceased, who was his son, had been at outs with each other for two years was asked the following question: "What first started the trouble between you?" "How many of your children took sides with John (the deceased)?" The court sustained objections of the State Attorney to both of these questions, exceptions to the rulings were duly taken and they are [344] assigned as error. We do not think there was any error in either of the rulings. As to what it was that two years before the tragedy first started the ill-feelings between the defendant and his deceased son, was too remote and was wholly immaterial and irrelevant to any issue in the case. And the same may be said of the second of the above questions excluded by the court. After the defendant had testified in substance that when the deceased drove up to the scene of the tragedy he stated that he had a gallon of whisky and nothing to do but to ride around and drink it, the State Attorney called a witness in rebuttal, and asked the witness who was present at the scene of the tragedy, whether the deceased had then and there made the remark to the effect that he had a gallon of whisky and nothing to do but ride around and drink it. To this question the defendant objected, but the court permitted the question to be asked and answered, to which ruling exception was taken and it is assigned as error. While it is true that this was somewhat of an immaterial point in the case, yet we cannot say that the ruling here assigned was reversible error, since we cannot see how the defendant was materially injured thereby.

The last assignment of error is the denial of the defendant's motion for new trial made on the grounds that the verdict of the jury is not supported by the evidence and is contrary to the evidence. Without a rehearsal of it here, it is sufficient for us to say that the evidence abundantly sustains the verdict returned, and finding no reversible error in the record, the judgment of the Circuit Court in said cause is hereby affirmed at the cost of Santa Rosa County, the plaintiff in error having been adjudged to be insolvent.

[345] Shackelford, C. J., and Cockrell, Hocker, and Whitfield, J. J., concur.

NOTE.

Intoxication as Affecting Admissibility of Confession.

Introductory, 1168.

General Rule, 1168.

Liquor Furnished by Officer, 1169.

Introductory.

The present note discusses the admissibility of a confession as affected by the fact that the accused was intoxicated at the time of making it. The right of an accused to show that he was insane at the time of making a confession is treated in the note to State v. Berberick, 16 Ann. Cas. 1077; and the admissibility of a confession made while asleep is considered in the note to Martinez v. People, Ann. Cas. 1914C 559. As to the admissibility of a confession procured by fraud or trick see the notes to Rex v. White, 15 Ann. Cas. 272; Daniels v. State, 6 Am. St. Rep. 238, 249. The admissibility of a confession induced by duress or by threats or promises of the persons having the accused in custody is treated in the note to Daniels v. State, supra; the admissibility of a confession secured by an exhortation to tell the truth or by an appeal to religious, moral or superstitious sentiment, in the note to State v. Williams, Ann. Cas. 1913B 302, and the effect on the admissibility of a confession of the fact that the accused was tied, chained, shackled or confined in a dark cell, in the note to State v. Miller, Ann. Cas. 1912B 1053. For a general discussion of the inducements which will render a confession inadmissible, see 1 R. C. L. tit. Admissions and Declarations, p. 553.

General Rule.

A confession otherwise voluntary is not to be excluded because the accused was intoxicated at the time of making it. That fact goes to the weight only of the confession and is for the exclusive consideration of the jury. Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 30; Lester v. State, 32 Ark. 727; People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 Pac. 288; State v. Laughlin, 171 Ind. 66, 84 N. E. 756; State v. Feltes, 51 Ia. 495, 1 N. W. 755; State v. Berry, 50 La. Ann. 1309, 24 So. 329; Com. v. Howe, 9 Gray (Mass.) 110; State v. Grear, 28 Minn. 426, 10 N. W. 472, 41 Am. Rep. 296; Whitney v. State, 8 Mo. 165; People v. Kent, 41 Miss. 191, 83 N. Y. S. 948; Williams v. State, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 211; Leach v. State, 99 Tenn. 584, 42 S. W. 195; Lienpo v. State, 28 Tex. App. 179, 12 S. W. 588; White v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. 625, 25 S. W. 784; Mixon v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 66, 35 S. W. 394; In re Stanbro, 1 Manitoba 263. See also State v. Bryan, 74 N. C. 351. And see the reported case. Compare Trepanier v. Rex, 19 Can. Crim. Cas. 290 (undue influence exerted on intoxicated prisoner). Thus in State v. Grear, 28 Minn. 426, 10 N. W. 472, 41 Am. Rep. 296, it was said: "Upon the trial, the state called a witness by whose testimony it was proposed to prove statements of the defendant in the nature of a confession. Objection was made to this, upon the ground that, as was claimed, the defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the alleged confession that he did not know what he was saying, and defendant's counsel claimed the right to examine the witness upon this point before his evidence of the confession should be received, and offered also to call other witnesses to the same fact at the same stage of the trial. This was refused by the court, and exception was taken. The court was right. Intoxication of the accused at the time when he may have made a confession would have affected the weight of the confession as evidence against himself, but would not go to exclude the confession from being put in evidence. . . . That degree of intoxication which leaves one capable of making a narration of past events, or of stating his own participation in a crime, is not sufficient to exclude the inculpatory statement from the consideration of the jury." In Com. v. Howe, 9 Gray (Mass.) 116; the rule was stated as follows: "The court instructed the jury that the evidence of intoxication was an objection to the weight and not to the competency of the testimony; and that if the defendant was so much under the influence of liquor as not to understand what he was confessing, they should disregard the confessions altogether. These instructions were entirely right." So in People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 Pac. 288, the court said: "The objection that the court erred in permitting the introduction of the statement of the defendant explaining his possession of the money found upon his person cannot be sustained. The objection was, that it should not have been allowed because it appeared that the defendant was drunk at the time he made the statement. There is an old proverb to the effect that drunken persons tell the truth, but, without applying that in this case, it appears that while the defendant may have been slightly under the influence of liquor, he himself claimed that he was 'straight,' and the character of the statement itself clearly indicates that he was not so much intoxicated as to be unconscious of the meaning and effect of his words. The statement was therefore properly admitted for the consideration of the jury." Similarly in Leach v. State, 99 Tenn. 584, 42 S. W. 195, it was said: "It is a vain impeachment of the defendant's confession to say that it was made when he was somewhat under the influence of whisky, and that, subsequently, when sober and imprisoned, he firmly denied its truthfulness. There is no proof or indication that he was not in the fullest possession of his mental faculties at the time he confessed his guilt; on the contrary, the manner, time, place, and substance of the confession show deliberation and intelligence on his part. That the confession was unwise, and the subsequent denial more consistent with his desire to save himself from the consequences of his crime, can hardly be doubted. But slight intoxication could not impair the force or truthfulness of the confession made. Such a condition is not likely to render one false. In vino veritas." In the case of In re Stanbro, 1 Manitoba 263, applying the rule the court said: "It is further contended that the prisoner was, at the time of the making of the confession, so under the influence of liquor, or in such a mental condition from the effects of liquor, that no confession or statement then made, should be admitted as evidence against him. From the effects of the liquor drunk that day, he must, at the time of the interview with Hall, have largely recovered. He was drinking in the morning, was arrested at about twelve o'clock, and the interview did not take place until nine or ten hours afterwards, during all which period he had not been drinking anything. He had however, been drinking heavily for a considerable time before his arrest, and was, as one of the witnesses says, about the time of the interview, 'very much broke up.' The chief of police thinks he was verging on delirium tremens. I do not find that a confession being made by a man while under the influence of liquor, or suffering, as the prisoner was from the effects of liquor, is any reason for excluding it."

Liquor Furnished by Officer.

By the weight of authority a confession by an intoxicated prisoner is none the less admissible because the liquor was furnished to him by the officer having him in custody. People v. Ramirez, 56 Cal. 533, 38 Am. Rep. 73; State v. Hogan, 117 La. 863, 42 So. 352; State v. Brooks, 220 Mo. 74, 119 S. W. 353; Jefferds v. People, 5 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 522. And see State v. Hopkirk, 84 Mo. 278; Cortez v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. 375, 66 S. W. 453; Jones v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. 329, 96 S. W. 930. In Rex v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187, 32 E. C. L. 487, it appeared that the prisoner had made a statement to a constable in whose custody he was, but that he was drunk at the time; and "it was imputed that the constable had given him liquor to cause him to be so." Lord Coleridge said: "I am of opinion that a statement being made by a prisoner while he was drunk is not therefore inadmissible as evidence against him; and that, to render a confession inadmissible, it must either be obtained by hope or fear. This is a matter of observation for me, upon the weight that ought to attach to this statement when it is considered by the jury." In State v. Brooks, 220 Mo. 74, 119 S. W. 353, it was said: "In instruction number 10 the court instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the defendant, while in custody of the officers, was given intoxicating liquors and that thereby the defendant was not in a condition to realize what he was doing, and while in that condition a confession was obtained from him, then the jury should reject such confession. So that the defendant had the full benefit of his claim that his confession was not voluntary. But the jury found that the said confession was voluntarily made." In Jefferds v. People, 5 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 522, the court said: "An officer may be employed by the prosecution for the purpose of watching a supposed criminal, and for the purpose of detection. Crime often cannot be otherwise discovered. But when such an officer ingratiate himself as a friend to the criminal, when he procures liquor and uses it for the intoxication and ruin of the supposed culprit, when he urges upon him the constant use of intoxicating drinks, until maddened by their use, the accused, in a spirit of boasting rather than in the exercise of his reason, and in response to suggestions made by the officer, proclaims his guilt, it appears to me that the officer goes far beyond the line of his duty, and is guilty of conduct throwing no credit on such an administration of criminal justice. But, however much we may condemn this proceeding, still it was not error to admit the testimony on the trial. The learned judge before whom the case was tried, while he correctly held that the confessions were not to be kept from the jury, felt also unwilling to state to the jury his approval of the mode in which they were obtained. However, in McCabe v. Com. (Pa.) 8 Atl. 45, it was said: "We think the conduct of William H. Kain in furnishing liquor to the defendant after his arrest, and in the attempt which he made to induce declarations from this defendant, and the manner in which that attempt was made, is deserving of the most severe condemnation. No man has a right to seek to induce from a defendant statements by any such means, and declarations induced by such influences ought not to be introduced in evidence, or be given any consideration in determining the defendant's guilt." In McNutt v. State, 68 Neb. 207, 94 N. W. 143, the court said: "In this connection it is shown that immediately after the defendant's arrest, while the sheriff who arrested him was returning him to Hartington, where the crime was committed, the sheriff not only allowed the defendant to have intoxicating drinks, but himself furnished such drinks to the defendant, and afterwards questioned the defendant in regard to the offense. Such conduct on the part of the sheriff is not justifiable, and under ordinary circumstances the admitting in evidence of the testimony in regard to admissions so obtained would be erroneous and require a reversal of the judgment of conviction, but in this case the evidence of the defendant himself shows that this conduct of the sheriff was due rather to thoughtlessness than to any attempt on his part to procure damaging evidence against the defendant, and also shows that the defendant afterwards, of his own free will, repeated the same statements to several other parties, and made other similar statements in open court upon his preliminary examination, so that it is impossible to believe that the defendant has been prejudiced by this improper conduct of the sheriff." In Rex v. Sexton, 3 Russ. C. & M.

462, the granting of a prisoner's request for liquor seems to have been regarded as an inducement, which was held to exclude a confession. In Flagg v. People, 40 Mich. 706, the giving of liquor to an accused person was one of the circumstances which were held to render a confession by him inadmissible. The court said: "When a party under arrest is told by the officer that the best thing he can do is to own up—that he had better make a statement;—when it is supposed that a statement can be forced—'knocked'—out of him because 'he was a weak one;' when intoxicating liquors are furnished him to aid in the forcing process; and when on the following morning he is taken in irons to the office of an attorney, and there, in the presence of those hostile to him, with bolted doors, is interrogated, his answers reduced to writing and sworn to, it is idle to say that such a confession was free and voluntarily made, even although the witnesses may testify that no inducements were made or held out to him."

STATE EX REL. MAYOR AND SELECTMEN OF TOWN OF HOMER

v.

LOUISIANA AND NORTHWEST RAILROAD COMPANY.

Louisiana Supreme Court—March 30, 1914.

135 La. 14; 64 So. 926.

Railroads — Repair of Road — Power of Municipality to Compel.

A mandamus will lie to compel a railroad company to make the necessary repairs to its road running through the streets of a city or town, so as to keep the same free for the use of the public, and clear of all obstructions. Rev. St. § 691, as amended by Acts No. 204 of 1902, p. 395, and No. 157 of 1910, p. 236; Act No. 193 of 1912, p. 381.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from Third Judicial District Court, Parish of Claiborne: BARNETTE, Judge.

Action for mandamus. Mayor and Selectmen of Town of Homer, relator, and Louisiana and Northwest Railroad Company, defendant. Judgment for relator. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

John A. Richardson for appellant.
Enos C. McClendon for appellee.

[14] SOMMERVILLE, J.—The town of Homer, alleging that the defendant railroad company has permitted two of its overhead bridges in the town to be out of repair and dangerous, and that it is the duty of the defendant to keep in good order and repair its bridges and other constructions, so that the streets of said town may be unobstructed, and the citizens have the free use of the [15] same, ask that a mandamus issue to compel defendant to reconstruct said two bridges, to put them in good order, and to make them safe for public traffic, within a time to be fixed by the court, and that said bridges be so adjusted that the streets will not be obstructed.

Respondent answered, alleging that one of the two bridges complained of was in good order and repair; and admitted that the second was in bad order. It further admitted that it had caused the two bridges to be built, and that it is its duty to keep all of the bridges constructed by it in the town in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the public. It further expressed a willingness to do the repairing and reconstructing necessary, but alleges that it is not able to procure the funds necessary to do the work, and that it is impossible for it, at this time, to make the necessary repairs.

There was judgment in favor of the relator, ordering defendant to reconstruct one of the bridges complained of, and to repair or strengthen the abutments at the ends of the other bridge. Defendant has appealed.

In this court George W. Hunter has appeared and shown that the defendant company has been placed in the hands of a receiver, and that he is the receiver. He asks to be made a party to the cause. It is so ordered.

It is made the clear duty of the railroad company to keep in good order and repair and free from obstruction the streets of any town or city through which said railroad passes. This proceeding by mandamus is brought under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, § 691, as amended by Act No. 204 of 1902, p. 395, and Act No. 157 of 1910, p. 236, and under Act No. 193 of 1912, p. 381.

Respondent specially complains of that provision in the judgment appealed from which requires it to begin the construction [16] and repair therein ordered with 15 days from the time the judgment became final, and to complete it within 30 days from the time said work was begun. The law provides that railroad companies should have reasonable time in which to reconstruct and make the repairs ordered; and, while the time fixed in the judgment may be short, it is not shown to be unreasonable; and we do not feel warranted in making any change in the judgment appealed from.

The evidence shows that one of the bridges complained of was repaired by respondent before the case went to trial, and that the only additional work necessary in connection with that bridge is to make the abutments at the ends of the bridge more secure; and the trial court ordered this work to be done.

The evidence shows, with reference to the other bridge, that it had fallen into decay, was out of use, and had to be reconstructed.

There is no evidence in the record showing that respondent cannot get the money required to do the work ordered to be done.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.

Power of Municipality to Compel Railroad or Street Railway to Repair Bridge within Municipal Limits.

The power of a municipal corporation to impose on a street railway company such regulations as will tend to keep the streets used by the railway in a proper condition is illustrated by the cases upholding the right to compel the sprinkling of the tracks (see the note to St. Paul v. St. Paul City R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1912B 1136) and the repair of the portion of the street occupied by it (see the note to Reading v. United Traction Co. 7 Ann. Cas. 380). In the reported case it is held that a railroad may be compelled to repair a bridge maintained by it within the limits of a municipality in order to prevent an obstruction of the street. A similar holding was made in Queensbury v. Hudson Valley R. Co. 158 App. Div. 258, 143 N. Y. S. 120, wherein a street railway company was required to strengthen a bridge to withstand the increased weight of new rolling stock adopted by it.

LOUDEN

v.

CITY OF CINCINNATI ET AL.

Ohio Supreme Court—March 17, 1914.

20 Ohio St. 144; 106 N. E. 970.

Explosions and Explosives — Blasting — Injury by Concussion.

The use of high-power explosives in making excavations of rock and earth is a lawful method of accomplishing that purpose; but where dirt and stone are thrown by the force of the blast upon the property of another, or where the work of blasting is done in such proximity to adjoining property that regardless of the care used the natural, necessary or probable result of the force of the explosion will be to break the surface of the ground, destroy the buildings, and produce a concussion of the atmosphere, the force of which will invade the adjoining premises, injuring the buildings thereon and making them unfit and unsafe for habitation, the person or corporation making use of such explosives will be liable for the damage proximately and naturally resulting therefrom, irrespective of the question of negligence or want of skill in the blasting operations.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A petition averring that defendants in the use of high explosives broke into plaintiff's land and dwelling house with force and violence by means of explosions of great power and frequency in the street adjacent to, and in close proximity to plaintiff's dwelling house, and thereby produced concussions and vibrations of the earth and air, causing foundations, walls, chimneys, ceilings, cistern and vault and window glass of plaintiff's house to break and fall, rendering such house unsafe for habitation and untenable, states a cause of action.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Hamilton county.

Action for damages. Nancy Loudon, plaintiff, and City of Cincinnati et al., defendants. Judgment for defendants in Court of Common Pleas. Judgment affirmed by Circuit Court. Plaintiff brings error. REVERSED.

[145] The plaintiff filed an amended petition in the common pleas court of Hamilton county which amended petition reads as follows:

"Now comes Nancy Loudon the plaintiff herein and by leave of court files this her amended petition herein, and says that the defendant, the City of Cincinnati, is a municipal corporation under the laws of the State of Ohio; that the defendant, the Board of Trustees, 'Commissioners of Water Works,' Cincinnati, Ohio, is a legally constituted board appointed and qualified under and in pursuance of the laws of the State of Ohio, for the construction, enlargement, extension and improvement and addition to the Water Works of the City of Cincinnati; that the defendant The W. J. Gawne Company is a corporation under the laws of the State of Delaware.

"And plaintiff says that during all the times hereinafter mentioned this plaintiff was and has been ever since and still is the owner in fee simple and in possession of Lot No. — in S. W. Hartshorn's Subdivision, with a dwelling house thereon known and numbered as No. 3521 Humbert Avenue in the City of Cincinnati.

[146] "That at the time of the doing of the wrongs hereinafter stated said dwelling house was a frame and plastered building with stone and brick foundation and stone and brick chimneys, all occupied by plaintiff as her home and dwelling house.

"That said defendant The City of Cincinnati, through its said Board of Trustees, 'Commissioners of Water Works,' Cincinnati, Ohio, defendant contracted with and employed the defendant The W. J. Gawne Company to excavate and to construct for said city a tunnel for supplying water to said city.

"That said defendants made the excavation for and construction of said tunnel along, through and under the ground adjacent to the said dwelling house of the plaintiff.

"That in the process of so doing, said defendants loosened and removed the earth and rock by means of blasts of high power explosives.

"And that in so doing, the said defendants trespassed upon and under and broke into the plaintiff's said land and dwelling house with force and violence by means of said explosions of great power and frequency, and in close proximity to plaintiff's said dwelling house.

"And that the defendants thereby produced concussions and vibrations of the earth and air and of the material of this plaintiff's said dwelling house.

"And the defendants thereby caused the foundations, walls, chimneys, ceilings, cistern, vault and window glass of plaintiff's said house to crack and break and fall and rendered said house unsafe [147] for habitation and untenable, and deprived plaintiff of the use of said house.

"And that said defendants by said explosions continued through day and night caused terrifying and disturbing noises and vibrations of the ground and air and dwelling house of this plaintiff, and deprived plaintiff and her family of sleep and rest and of the enjoyment of her home and property and thereby caused her great inconvenience, discomfort, suffering, injury, damage and loss.

"That the excavation for and construction of said tunnel was entirely within and under the management and control of the defendants, and said plaintiff had nothing to do with it except to endure the injuries, suffering, losses and damages herein complained of.

"That by reason of the above described acts of the defendants, the plaintiff has been damaged by the said defendants in the sum of One Thousand Dollars ($1000).

"Wherefore the plaintiff asks judgment against said defendants and each of them for One Thousand Dollars.

"And plaintiff further prays for an order directed to the defendants, The City of Cincinnati and the Board of Trustees, 'Commissioners of Water Works,' Cincinnati, Ohio, and each of them, from paying over any money now in their hands to the said defendant, The W. J. Gawne Company, until after the claim of this plaintiff has been fully paid and satisfied. And plaintiff further prays for her costs and for all other and further relief to which she is entitled."

[148] To this amended petition the defendants filed the following demurrer:

"Comes now the defendants herein and jointly and severally demur to plaintiff's amended petition for the reason that same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

The common pleas court sustained the demurrer to this amended petition, and dismissed the action at plaintiff's costs. The circuit court affirmed the judgment of the common pleas court.

Patterson A. Reese for plaintiff in error.

Stanley W. Merrill, Joseph W. Heintzman and Jonas B. Frenkel for defendants in error.

DONAHUE, J.—The question in this case is raised by the demurrer to the amended petition, and it is one that materially affects property rights in this state. Plaintiff in her amended petition avers that the defendants in the process of constructing a tunnel through and under Humbert Avenue, for supplying water to the city of Cincinnati, loosened and removed earth and rock by means of high-power explosives; that plaintiff was the owner of a frame dwelling house, with stone and brick foundation and stone and brick chimneys, occupied by her and her family as a home; that this tunnel was being constructed through and under the street adjacent to this dwelling house; that defendants trespassed upon and under and broke into plaintiff's land and dwelling house with force and violence by means of explosions of great [149] power and frequency and in close proximity to plaintiff's dwelling house, and thereby produced concussions and vibrations of the earth and air, destroying the cistern on her lot, the foundation of her building, breaking the glass in the windows, cracking and destroying the chimneys, and thereby rendered her house unsafe and unfit for habitation and depriving plaintiff of its use, enjoyment and occupation.

A demurrer to this amended petition was sustained by the trial court for the reason that it contained no averments of negligence or want of skill in the handling of these explosives. The amended petition charges a trespass upon plaintiff's land by the transmission of force through the soil and sub-surface and concussion of air produced by the explosion of blasts used in loosening rock and earth in the construction of the tunnel in the street in front of plaintiff's premises.

The question presented is whether the owner of property may make use of high explosives on his own premises, in the accomplishment of a lawful purpose, provided he uses due care, notwithstanding the necessary, natural or probable result thereof is to injure or destroy adjacent property. The supreme court of California, in the case of Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 165, 10 Pac. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556, has spoken in no uncertain terms upon this question. In the fourth proposition of the syllabus it is held that "Where the owner of a lot situated in a large city, and contiguous to the dwelling house of another, uses gunpowder to blast out rocks on his lot, he is liable for the damages proximately and naturally resulting [150] to the house of the adjoining owner from the act of blasting, whether the damage was caused by rocks thrown against the house or by a concussion of the air around it." The court, on page 159, uses this language: "The defendant seems by his contention to claim that he had a right to blast rocks with gunpowder on his own lot in San Francisco, even if he had shaken Mrs. Colton's house to ruins, provided he used care and skill in so doing, and although he ought to have known that by such act, which was intrinsically dangerous, the damage would be a necessary, probable, or natural consequence. But in this he is mistaken."

In the case of Cahill v. Eastman, 18 Minn. 324, 10 Am. Rep. 184, it was held: "Where it is sought to make one accountable for the consequences of acts done by him upon his own land, the question, in general, is not whether he exercised due care, but whether his acts caused the damage. If they necessarily tend to injure his neighbor in his pre-existing rights of property, he is liable in damages for the natural and necessary consequences thereof, irrespective of any consideration as to the care and skill with which such operations may have been conducted." To the same effect is the case of Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318; Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Wilson v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 261, 11 Am. Rep. 352; Joilet v. Harwood, 86 Ill. 110, 29 Am. Rep. 17.

The New York court of appeals held, in the case of Hay v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279, that defendant was liable for injury caused from blasting on its own premises, although no negligence or want of skill in executing the work was alleged or [151] proven. The same principle in relation to the storing of water is announced in the case of Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec. 72. Also in reference to the storage of gunpowder and other explosive materials, in the case of Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 36 Am. Rep. 654. In the case of McKeon v.

See, 51 N. Y. 300, 10 Am. Rep. 659, an injunction was granted against defendant from operation of machinery by steam power which produced jarring and shaking of plaintiff's building. In the case of Sutton v. Clarke, decided in England in 1815, 6 Taunt. (Eng.) 29; it was stated in the opinion by Sir Vicary Gibbs, C. J., that where a person improves his own land for his own benefit, according to his best skill and diligence and not foreseeing that his act will produce injury, yet if he unwittingly injures his neighbor he is answerable. This was the settled law of England at that time, and many authorities are cited by the court. That doctrine has been modified, at least in this country, to the extent that where the injury was not the natural, necessary or probable consequence of the act of plaintiff, and could not have been foreseen, no recovery can be had unless there be an actual or constructive trespass or negligence in doing the work. In the case of Booth v. Rome, etc. R. Co. 140 N. Y. 267, 35 N. E. 592, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 24 L.R.A. 105, the court of appeals seems to have departed from the doctrine announced in the case of Hay v. Cohoes Co. supra. However, the court distinguishes these cases. In the latter the court held that defendant was not liable for the injury caused by blasting notwithstanding that during the progress of the work it was informed of the [152] injury that was being done. This decision was largely predicated upon the particular facts in that case. The rocky surface of the upper part of Manhattan Island made blasting necessary in the work of excavating, and unless permitted, the value of the lots, especially for business purposes, would be seriously affected. However, the fair and legitimate interpretation and application of the doctrine announced in that case, as elaborated and explained in the opinion at page 278, would permit the second proprietor to destroy the building of the first, and the third to destroy the building of the second, and in like manner each succeeding proprietor might destroy the building of his predecessor until the territory was exhausted, and then there would remain upon this territory but one building; the last one, fit and safe for use and occupancy, unless the several owners followed in the trail of devastation and repaired or restored their buildings. There are, of course, two very important considerations to be kept in mind in the disposition of a question of this character: First, to give to the owner the largest liberty possible, in the use, occupation and improvement of his own property, consistent with the rights of others, and the right to employ modern methods and machinery in accomplishing the improvements desired. Second, that one may not use his own property to the injury of any legal right of another. This maxim of the common law, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, is so well established and so universally recognized that it needs neither argument nor citation of authority in its support. But [153] it must be conceded that this is no longer the law if the owner of a lot may employ such means in the improvement of his property as will naturally and necessarily result in the destruction of adjoining property. Particularly would this be true if, as in the case of Booth v. Rome, etc. R. Co. supra, he is informed that the means and methods that he is employing are in fact destroying his neighbor's property, and notwithstanding that knowledge he may continue in the use of these methods and these means without liability therefor, unless perchance he is guilty of negligence or want of skill in the handling of the explosives used. If the means employed will, in the very nature of things, injure and destroy his neighbor's property, notwithstanding the highest possible care is used in the handling of the destructive agency, the result to the adjoining property is just as disastrous as if negligence had intervened. If one may knowingly destroy his neighbor's property in the improvement of his own, it is little consolation to the neighbor to know that his property was destroyed with due care and in a scientific manner. If the consequences of the act could not be foreseen, if the means employed by a person in the improvement of his own property would not naturally, necessarily or probably cause the destruction of adjoining property, then the question of negligence in doing the work would become important, but when he makes use of such means as will naturally, necessarily or probably result in the destruction of property, a different rule must obtain, otherwise the maxim of the law above stated, [154] so well established and so universally recognized, must be abandoned forever.

The doctrine announced in the case of Booth v. Rome, etc. R. Co. supra, was reaffirmed by the court of appeals in the case of Benner v. Atlantic Dredging Co. 134 N. Y. 156, 31 N. E. 328, 30 Am. St. Rep. 649, 17 L.R.A. 220, and Holland House Co. v. Baird, 169 N. Y. 136, 62 N. E. 149. In the later case the court stated in its opinion that this is the settled law of that state. The great weight of authorities, however, would seem to indicate that other states have not adopted this rule. Thompson in his Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, Vol. 1, Section 765, says: "It is obvious, upon a moment's reflection, that the work of blasting rocks, being absolutely necessary in excavating through beds of rock, in mining, in digging wells, in excavating foundations for buildings, in improving roads and streets, in digging canals, and in building railways, cannot under all circumstances be regarded as a nuisance per se and condemned as being negligent as a matter of law. On the other hand, it must be regarded—and the decisions so regard it—as a work which one proprietor may lawfully do upon his own land, provided he takes due care to avoid injuring persons and property in the vicinity, and subject to his obligation to pay damages for any injury which he does in case his blasting involves a direct invasion of the premises of an adjacent proprietor." In Section 764, the rule is stated that a recovery may be had for damages to adjoining property from blasting: 1. Where dirt and stones are thrown by the blast upon the adjoining property, irrespective of the [155] question of negligence. 2. Where the work of blasting is done in a situation where it is necessarily dangerous to persons or property, whether the injury proceeds from the impact of rocks thrown or from atmospheric concussion, irrespective of the care or skill used. 3. In all other cases liability will attach to the person or corporation carrying on the dangerous employment where the work has been negligently done.

This would seem to be the rule in Ohio. This court affirmed without opinion the case of Columbus v. Williard, reported in 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 33, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. page 113, in which it was held that "A municipal corporation which proceeds with skill and care, and without malice, to drain a street for a lawful purpose, is liable to the owner of an abutting lot for such injury as may result to his soil from the withdrawal of its natural support, even though the support withdrawn consists of percolating waters and sand of such nature and so blended with the waters as to be inseparable from them." In this case it is not necessary to extend the rule of liability that far. In that case it does not appear from the report that the damage caused was the necessary, natural or probable consequence of the act of the defendant. Not only that, but it involved the question of percolating waters.

We think the correct rule is stated in the case of Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408, in which it was held that: "Where the owner of a stone quarry, by blasting with gunpowder, destroys the building of an adjoining land owner, it [156] is no defense to show that ordinary care was exercised in the manner in which the quarry was worked." Judge McIlvaine in that case said: "Neither can one in possession of a parcel of land operate and manage a mine or quarry upon it in such manner as to injure or destroy the property of an adjoining proprietor, justify himself by showing that he used ordinary care in the use of his own property." In the case of Bradford Glycerine Co. v. St. Marys Woolen Mfg. Co. 60 Ohio St. 560, 54

N. E. 528, 71 Am. St. Rep. 740, 45 L.R.A. 658, it was held by this court that: "Nitroglycerine is a substance usually recognized as highly explosive and dangerous, the storage of which at any place is a constant menace to the property in that vicinity. And one who stores it on his own premises is liable for injuries caused to surrounding property by its exploding, although he neither violates any provision of the law regulating its storage nor is chargeable with negligence contributing to the explosion."

It is insisted by counsel for defendant in error that this case does not apply to the case under consideration, but when that case was before this court it was then contended that the authorities in reference to the use of explosives did not apply to that case because in one instance the party to be charged was actively engaged in the work that caused the injury, and purposely and intentionally caused the explosion, while in the other case he was merely using the premises to store the dangerous substance, not intending that it should explode; but this court held that both cases involved the same principle and in the discussion of that [157] question said: "The blasting doubtless is a menace to adjacent property, but so is the storing of a highly explosive substance." In the cases of Defiance Water Co. v. Olinger, 54 Ohio St. 532, 44 N. E. 238, 32 L.R.A. 736, and Gas-Fuel Co. v. Andrews, 50 Ohio St. 695, 35 N. E. 1059, 29 L.R.A. 337, this question is further considered and discussed.

We are informed by counsel that the case of Armstrong v. Cincinnati, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. (N. S.) 76, affirmed by this court 82 Ohio St. 454, 92 N. E. 1108, involved facts similar to the facts averred in the amended petition in the case now under consideration. In that case the trial court charged the jury that if the defendants exercised the highest degree of care in the use of explosives, they would not be liable for the damages resulting therefrom. The jury found for the defendant. The plaintiff prosecuted error to reverse this judgment upon two grounds: First, that the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, and, second, for error in the charge of the trial court. The circuit court affirmed the judgment of the common pleas court, and among other things held there was no error in the charge of the court, citing in support of its conclusion the New York cases to which we have referred. The circuit court further found from an examination of the record that: "The jury might well find that the injury, if any, to plaintiff's property was not caused by the work of defendants." The fact that that case involved the weight of the evidence may have been the reason for its affirmance by this court. The law of this state in reference to this subject having been declared in the cases of Tiffin v. McCormack [158] and Bradford Glycerine Co. v. St. Marys Woolen Mfg. Co. supra, it would follow that if this court intended to depart from the doctrine announced in these cases it would have reported the case and overruled these authorities.

It is insisted by counsel for defendants in error that because no rock, soil or debris was actually thrown upon plaintiff's premises there was no actual trespass, but neither was there such a trespass in the case of Bradford Glycerine Co. v. St. Marys Woolen Mfg. Co. supra. We are unable to distinguish between a case where a fragment of rock or a portion of the soil is thrown onto an adjoining property and a case where the force of an explosion is transmitted through the soil and substratum, jarring, cracking and breaking it, destroying the cistern and foundation of the building and wrecking the building itself by a concussion of the air around it, thereby doing far more injury than a fragment of rock could do. It is a distinction without a difference. If this terrific force may be set in motion by the owner of one parcel of ground, with full knowledge upon his part that such force will invade, damage and destroy the property of the adjoining proprietor, what difference does it make how this force accomplishes the result that, in the very nature of things, must have been anticipated? Is not a concussion of the air and jarring, breaking and cracking the ground with such force as to wreck the buildings thereon as much an invasion of the rights of the owner as the hurling of a missile thereon? If there is any difference whatever, it [159] is purely technical, and ought to find no favor with the courts. Certainly the application of a force sufficient to crack the surface of the land to such a depth as to destroy the foundations of buildings, to break windows, and throw down chimneys, is a direct invasion of property rights.

The amended petition does not aver in terms that the injury to plaintiff's property was the natural, or necessary, or probable, result of defendants' acts, but it does aver a trespass, and if also avers that these explosives were exploded in such close proximity to plaintiff's premises and that they were of such great power and frequency, day and night, that they did result in the destruction of plaintiff's property. It was not one single explosion, the result of which defendants might not have foreseen, but it was a continuous bombardment, which finally resulted in the injury complained of. It is not necessary that a pleader should draw a conclusion from the facts pleaded. It is sufficient if the allegation of the petition states the facts upon which plaintiff relies for recovery, and if the plaintiff is able to maintain by proofs the allegations of her amended petition, she is entitled to recover for the damages resulting from the invasion of her rights and the destruction of her property.

The judgment of the circuit court affirming the judgment of the common pleas court and the judgment of the common pleas court sustaining the demurrer to the petition, are reversed, and the cause remanded to the common pleas court with [160] directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition, and for further proceedings according to law.

Judgment reversed.

Nichols, C.J., Johnson, Wanamaker, Newman and Wilkin, JJ., concur.

NOTE.

Injury to Property by Concussion or Vibration Resulting from Blasting.

Introductory, 1176.

View that Liability Is Absolute, 1176.

View that Liability Depends on Negligence, 1178.

Introductory.

The earlier cases passing on the liability for injuries to property caused by concussion or vibration due to blasting, are collated and discussed in the notes to Longtin v. Persell, 2 Ann. Cas. 198, Hickey v. McCabe, 19 Ann. Cas. 783, and Weitzmann v. Barber Asphalt Co. 123 Am. St. Rep. 560. This note presents the recent cases on the subject.

For a discussion of the liability for an injury to property caused by blasting accompanied by an actual physical invasion of the property, see the note to Central Iron, etc. Co. v. Vandenheuk, 11 Ann. Cas. 346.

View that Liability Is Absolute.

The trend of the majority of the recent decisions on the question is toward the rule that a person causing blasting to be done is liable for injuries to the property of another caused by the concussion or vibration resulting therefrom, irrespective of the question of negligence, and although there is no actual physical invasion of the property thus injured. Watson v. Mississippi River Power Co. (Ia.) 156 N. W. 188; Faust v. Pope, 132 Mo. App. 287, 111 S. W. 878; Johnson v. Kansas City Terminal R. Co. 182 Mo. App. 349, 170 S. W. 456; Bradshaw v. Kansas City Terminal R. Co. (Mo.) 170 S. W. 458; Patrick v. Smith, 75 Wash. 407, 134 Pac. 1076, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 740; Schade Brewing Co. v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 79 Wash. 651, 140 Pac. 897. And see the reported case. Compare Armstrong v. Cincinnati, 32 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 714, affirmed 82 Ohio St. 454.

92 N. E. 1108; Cincinnati v. Morrissey, 33 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 541, affirmed 87 Ohio St. 525, 102 N. E. 1121. In Watson v. Mississippi River Power Co. supra, it appeared that the construction of a dam required the blasting and removal of a large amount of rock from its natural bed under the river, much of it to the depth of 25 feet, and the plaintiff alleged that the blasting by a series of violent explosions was continued throughout a period of two years or more, and was of such a powerful character that the concussion or jar thereof broke the glass in the windows of his buildings, cracked the walls, loosened and injured the plastering, and otherwise injured those structures. There was no proof that rock or other material was cast on the plaintiff's premises by the blasting, but the injury complained of was caused solely "from the air concussion or earth vibration" set in action by the explosion of the blasts. The court said: "The initial proposition by appellant is that in its charge submitting the case to the jury the court erred in failing to instruct upon the law of negligence as applicable to this controversy. It is said the plaintiff charged negligence in the blasting, that such allegation was material to his right to recover damages, and without proof of the want of due care on defendant's part a verdict for plaintiff cannot be sustained. It is true the plaintiff did charge the blasting was done negligently, and, if we are to hold that a showing of negligence was essential to his right to recover, then the exception is well taken, and appellant is entitled to a reversal. But our practice act provides (Code, sec. 3639) that a party shall not be required to prove more than is necessary to entitle him to relief asked for, and if in this case plaintiff was not required to allege negligence in order to state a cause of action, and did allege facts other than negligence upon which, if true, he was entitled to damages, and introduced evidence tending to support the same, then the failure to prove negligence would not be fatal to his right of recovery, and the failure of the court to instruct upon the subject of negligence would not be prejudicial error. . . . In the case at bar the plaintiff alleged that the acts complained of were wrongful as well as negligent, and under the rule above stated our inquiry is reduced to the single question whether injuries to property caused solely by jar, concussion, or vibration of earth and air produced or set in motion by blasting constitute, under the circumstances stated, any wrong for which the law affords a remedy. This question has had the attention of the courts in several other jurisdictions, but thus far we have had no occasion to pass upon it in the direct and concrete form presented by the record in the present case. An examination of the precedents develops a divergence of judicial opinion. There is a class of cases which, according to appellant's contention hold that without allegation and proof of negligence damages of the kind suffered by the appellee herein cannot be recovered, while others adhere to the doctrine that a showing of negligence is not essential to the liability of a party who uses the dangerous agency of powerful explosives in such place or in such manner that the natural and proximate result thereof is injury to the person or property of another." After an extensive examination and review of the authorities, it was held that the trial court had not erred in failing to charge the jury that proof of negligence was necessary to the plaintiff's recovery. In Patrick v. Smith, 75 Wash. 407; 134 Pac. 1076, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 740, wherein it appeared that the defendants exploded "an exceedingly large amount of powder," which resulted in an alleged depletion of the water in the plaintiff's well, the court said: "Where one, blasting upon his land, exercising reasonable care, causes a concussion in the air or a vibration in the earth, or both, to the injury of the premises of another, but casts no physical substance upon his property, the authorities are divided on the question of liability. One line of cases holds that the injured party is without remedy; the other line holds that an actionable wrong has been committed. We think the latter view is both logical and just. It seems illogical to say that, if one puts off a blast of powder, a substance inherently dangerous, on his own premises, which causes a stone to be thrown through his neighbor's window, he is liable without regard to the degree of care used; but if it destroys his neighbor's houses, but casts no physical substance upon the premises, he is immune from liability unless it can be shown that reasonable care was not exercised. Moreover, we think the doctrine of damnum absque injuria when no negligence has been shown has been rejected in at least two cases in this court." And in Schade Brewing Co. v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 79 Wash. 651, 140 Pac. 897, the court said: "Contention is made that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury upon the subject of negligence on the part of appellant, and in submitting the cause to the jury upon the theory that respondent would have the right of recovery regardless of appellant's negligence, if the damage to its building was, in fact, the result of appellant's blasting in excavating for the subway. Such seems to be the theory of the court's instructions, though the question of appellant's negligence is neither specifically submitted to nor withheld from the jury by the court's instructions. We are of the opinion, in view of certain facts which we regard as conclusively shown, that it was proper for the court to regard the appellant's negligence as being of no consequence in determining its liability to respondent in this cause. It was, we think, conclusively shown by the evidence that the blasting which injured respondent's building, assuming, as the jury must have found, that it was so injured, was of a very heavy nature and effected by the use of dynamite; that the blasting was carried on, at the furthest, within a few hundred feet of the building; that it resulted in seriously cracking both the foundation and upper walls of the building; that is, if it had any injurious effect upon the building, as the jury, of course, found. This contention, we think, is fully disposed of in favor of respondent by the observation of Justice Gose in our recent decision in Patrick v. Smith, 75 Wash. 407, 134 Pac. 1076."

View that Liability Depends on Negligence.

In some jurisdictions it is held that where an injury to property from blasting is due solely to concussion, causing disturbance, jarring and vibration of the earth or air, there can be no recovery therefor unless the work is negligently and improperly done. Cherryvale v. Studyvin, 76 Kan. 235, 91 Pac. 60, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 385; Rost v. Union Pac. R. Co. 95 Kan. 713, 149 Pac. 679; Viele v. Mack Pav. etc. Co. 144 App. Div. 694, 129 N. Y. S. 604; Viele v. Mack Pav. etc. Co. 150 App. Div. 839, 135 N. Y. S. 147; Kaninsky v. Purcell, 158 N. Y. S. 165. And see Stancourt Laundry Co. v. Lamura, 147 N. Y. S. 995; Conron v. Fox, 90 Misc. 372, 153 N. Y. S. 425. In Rost v. Union Pac. R. Co. supra, the plaintiff sued for damages to her house caused by blasting done by the defendant in making an excavation on its right of way near where the building was located, resulting in cracking the outer wall of the building, which was of brick, and causing the plastering to break in places and fall. The jury were instructed that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to prove the negligence alleged, and that negligence could not be presumed but might be inferred from facts and circumstances. The court said: "The rule in Cherryvale v. Studyvin, 76 Kan. 235, 91 Pac. 60, is relied upon. In that case it was decided that as a general proposition whenever an individual, corporation or municipality has the right to do and does a work of this character, and injury results without trespass, the injured party in order to recover must allege and prove that the injury resulted from negligence in the doing of the work. There is no disposition to depart from the result thus stated, and hence the theory contended for by the plaintiff that recovery may be had in the absence of negligence cannot be approved. A careful examination of the record, however, leads to the conclusion, like that in the Studyvin case, that the evidence did in fact warrant the jury in finding the defendant negligent. Although a permit had been procured, and although in a technical sense no express negligence was specifically described, still the plaintiff testified in substance that the blasting had been going on for several months, and 'When the blasting was going on one day I was inside the building and felt the floor raising when the blasts went off. This was the last heavy blasting they did. It cracked a wide strip around the ceiling, which is there to this day. Then they blasted again and cracked it again. The crack appeared both in the ceiling and the wall and the plastering is loose now. This was one afternoon about four o'clock. It seemed to be an extra heavy blast.' Another witness testified that she was in the building when the blast just described was set off and that it shook the whole building and that the windows shook. A fair inference from this is that on the day in question, after a long continuance of the work in a careful manner, excessive charges of explosives were used, that is, charges unnecessarily and carelessly excessive, resulting in damage. This does not mean that it is a case of res ipsa loquitur or that the mere fact of injury is proof of negligence. It simply means that after proceeding with the work for a long time without injury, all at once, on the day in question, although nearer the building than formerly, what appeared to be an extraordinary amount of explosives was used resulting in injury to the building, and that from the whole situation thus presented negligence at that time might fairly and reasonably be inferred." In Kaninsky v. Purcell, 158 N. Y. S. 165, the court said: "The plaintiff has recovered damages for injuries to personal property which he claims were caused by negligent blasting by the defendant. The evidence of negligence is very vague. There is absolutely no testimony which shows the manner in which the blast was set off other than the testimony that the report was very loud and the concussion very great, and that rocks were cast from the blast upon the premises occupied by the plaintiff. Inasmuch, however, as the action was not for injuries caused by the falling of these rocks, but only for injuries caused by the concussion, the testimony of the physical precipitation of the rocks upon the plaintiff's premises is material only in so far as it may tend to show that the blast was excessive. It is well established in this state that there is no liability for consequential injuries caused by a concussion, without proof of negligence, and the mere fact that a blasting causes injury upon adjacent premises gives rise to presumption that the blasting was negligently performed.

In all the cases cited upon the briefs, or which I can now remember, a recovery has been permitted to stand only where the plaintiff has shown the manner in which the blast was actually set off, coupled with further proof that the method used was negligent. Nevertheless it seems quite certain to me that, where the testimony of the results and surrounding circumstances of a blast is so strong that, under ordinary circumstances, such a result could not have occurred unless the blasting was negligently performed, a prima facie case of negligence is made out. Such testimony, however, must undoubtedly clearly show facts which will legitimately lead to this inference, and the rule that the injured party must affirmatively show negligence cannot be disregarded."

In Stewart v. Haveddy, 212 Mass. 340, 98 N. E. 1030, which was an action to abate a nuisance from blasting caused by the defendant in the construction of a tunnel and to recover damages for injuries to the plaintiff's dwelling house and for the interference with her enjoyment of it resulting therefrom, the defendant contended that "the injury to the complainant's house was caused by shrinkage and not by the blasting or by the jar and vibration caused by the blasting." The master found that it "was caused by the vibration and shock due to the blasting done by the respondent." The court said: "On almost all of the matters of fact involved the parties were widely at variance. The plaintiff contended and introduced evidence tending to show that her house was injured and her comfort disturbed by the blasting; that the house was jarred and caused to vibrate by the blasting operations; that the blasting was conducted in an unreasonable and improper manner and could have been modified without loss of efficiency in the work; and that the defendant had ample notice and warning of the damage that was being done but made no change in his method of tunnelling, but continued to employ the same methods. In addition it should be observed that the contract between the defendant and the sewerage board required that the blasting shall be conducted with all possible care, so as to avoid injury to persons and property." On the other hand the defendant contended and introduced evidence tending to show that there was no jar or vibration; that the damage to the plaintiff's house was caused by shrinkage and the manner of its construction; that he used all the care and skill that reasonably could be required, having regard to due efficiency in carrying on the work; that he had no reason to believe damage was being done to the plaintiff's house; that he took all proper precautions; and that no change in the method of blasting was possible within proper engineering practice. . . . The argument addressed to us by the defendant in his brief relates almost wholly to matters of fact. It comes, it seems to us, in substance to the contention that the master should have believed his witnesses and should have adopted his views regarding the case rather than those of the plaintiff. But that was for the master to decide. We have carefully read and considered the printed report of the evidence. It not only cannot be said that the master's findings were plainly wrong, especially when considered in connection with the view which he took, and with the advantage which he had of seeing the witnesses face to face, but they were, it seems to us, warranted by the evidence."

In Adler v. Fox, 74 Misc. 483, 132 N. Y. 302, wherein it appeared that the water pipe leading into the plaintiff's house was broken by the falling in of a large section of rock above the pipe, due to the alleged negligence of the defendant in blasting out rock it was held that the defendant was not liable in trespass if the rock fell from the concussion and not as a direct result of the blast, but, if the rock was hurled on the water pipe, he would be liable in trespass.

In MacGinnis v. Marlborough Hudson Gas Co. 220 Mass. 575, 108 N. E. 384, L.R.A.1915D 1080, the following facts appeared: The defendant, under a license duly issued by the city, opened a trench three and one-half feet deep the whole length of the street and about ten feet from the easterly line of the street, for the purpose of laying a line of gas pipe. In connection with this work the contractor employed by the defendant blasted a ledge which extended from a few feet north of the plaintiff's house in a southwesterly direction across the street. When the frost in the ground began to thaw in the last days of March,—which was about two months after the gas pipe was laid,—and soon after the contractor had used a steam roller on the surface, water in considerable quantities began to percolate into the plaintiff's cellar through and under the wall. The city pumped it out daily for twenty-six days, during which time the water in the pond gradually receded. The jury specially found that the plaintiff's cellar was flooded because the ledge was blown out in the trench near the plaintiff's house; and also found that the work on the trench was not done negligently. The court said: "R. L. c. 110, sec. 76, which authorizes gas light companies to open the streets for the purpose of laying pipes, with the consent in writing of the mayor and aldermen, provides that 'such consent shall not affect the right or remedy to recover damages for an injury caused to persons or property by the acts of such corporations.' We do not undertake to pass upon the question whether this provision was designed to give the plaintiff a cause of action where none existed at common law, and to afford compensation for damage necessarily caused by work which was authorized by the statute and was executed in a reasonably proper manner. The present action is one of tort for alleged negligence. The jury specially found that the work on the trench was not done negligently; hence no case of liability at common law was made out,—even assuming that an action of tort would lie for negligent acts done in carrying out the purposes of the statute."

In Harbison-Walker Refractories Co. v. Scott, 185 Ala. 641, 64 So. 547, the ninth count of the complaint charged that the defendant was engaged in blasting on its own premises, and that, though notified by the plaintiff that it was injuring her residence thereby, the defendant nevertheless "wantonly and recklessly used explosives in such quantities and to such an extent as that the blast or explosion therefrom shook and jarred the plaintiff's house," etc. The court said: "A majority of the court are of the opinion that this count sufficiently charges wanton negligence in the conduct of defendant's blasting operations, so as to import liability within the principles stated in Bessemer Coal, etc. Co. v. Doak, 152 Ala. 166, 177 [44 So. 627, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 389]. The phrase 'wantonly and recklessly,' as here applied, charges negligence with a knowledge of the injury that would result; and it manifestly characterizes, not merely the act of blasting, but also the extent of the blasting and the quantity of explosives used. . . . To blast to a greater extent, or to use explosives in larger quantity, than is reasonably necessary, to the injury of another, is an actionable wrong, and that is what the count in question fairly and sufficiently charges."

In Deubel v. Millard Const. Co. 82 N. J. L. 523, 81 Atl. 1133, affirming 80 N. J. L. 98, 77 Atl. 611, it was held that there was evidence to warrant the drawing of the inference by the trial judge that the injuries complained of (concussion and the throwing of stone) were the results of blasting by the defendant, and also that the defendant did not exercise reasonable care or precautions to prevent injury to the adjoining property.

In Probst v. Hinesley, 133 Ky. 64, 117 S. W. 389, the court said: "Upon the question of blasting there are two classes of cases. In one line of cases, it is held that injuries to a house from blasting caused merely by the shaking of the earth or pulsation of the air, or both, give no right of action in the absence of negligence in doing the blasting. . . . In the other line of cases, it is held that the work of blasting is necessarily and inherently dangerous, and that a person who undertakes to blast near or so close to another's property as to cause injury assumes all risk of his operation. . . . In the case at bar the court did not fully adopt either one of these views, but very properly, we think, left to the jury the determination of the question whether or not, under the circumstances of the case, the natural and probable result of the blasting was to injure the plaintiff's property."

In Hieber v. Central Kentucky Traction Co. 145 Ky. 108, 140 S. W. 54, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 54, it was held that one engaged in blasting on his own property was not liable for mere concussion of the air not resulting in actual injury.

CHALVET

v.

HUSTON.

District of Columbia Court of Appeals—
January 4, 1915.

43 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

Witnesses — Competency — Knowledge of Facts — Hearing Letter Read.

A witness who heard a letter read may testify as to its contents, the letter being lost and the person who read it being dead; the obligation to the source of his knowledge of the contents going to the weight only of his testimony.

[See note at end of this case.]

Trial — Direction of Verdict.

Evidence considered and held sufficient to go to the jury on an issue whether money, the receipt of which by the defendant was admitted, was a loan or was paid under a contract for the future support of the payor.

Appeal from Supreme Court of District of Columbia.

Action for money loaned. Peter Chalvet, plaintiff, and William D. Huston, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

[78] Appeal from a judgment upon a directed verdict for the defendant, William D. Huston, appellee here, in an action for the recovery of $1,935 alleged to have been loaned the defendant by Peter Chalvet the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's evidence, in the form of a deposition, was substantially as follows: He was seventy-two years old, and had lived in Olivenheim, California, for thirty-five years. His wife, Minnie Chalvet, had been married before. She was of German descent, and could read and write the German language, but plaintiff could not. Mrs. Chalvet had several children [79] by her first marriage, one being the wife of the defendant. This daughter and her husband lived at Garrett Park, Maryland, where they owned a small home, for which the plaintiff understood they paid $3,000, and upon which there was an encumbrance of about $2,000. When plaintiff married Mrs. Chalvet he owned a ranch of 320 acres, but she had no property. She died in May, 1911.

The plaintiff offered to prove, through his deposition, that in 1910 Mrs. Chalvet received a letter from the Hustons, saying that they wished to borrow from the plaintiff $2,100 to liquidate the mortgage on their home, and that they would give a new mortgage to secure the loan. This letter was written in German, but was read to the plaintiff by Mrs. Chalvet, and was finally lost. The court, over the objection and exception of the defendant, excluded the evidence.

It further appeared that on October 7, 1910, plaintiff, with money which belonged to him, purchased a draft payable to his order for $2,000, which he indorsed to Mrs. Chalvet. In addition he gave her $100 in cash. Taking the draft and money, Mrs. Chalvet came East and went to the home of the Hustons, in Garrett Park, where she remained about three months, when she returned to her home in California. She then told the plaintiff that the defendant would not give her a mortgage; that he, the defendant, "said that if he gave the mortgage, and the plaintiff and his wife should die, then Mrs. Chalvet's other children would come in and get this note and mortgage, and might foreclose the mortgage, and he, Huston, would thereby lose the $1,500 he had already paid on the place." The $2,000 draft was introduced in evidence, and showed that it had been indorsed by Mrs. Chalvet to the defendant. On December 15, 1910, while Mrs. Chalvet was at the Hustons, the defendant wrote a letter in English to the plaintiff, which was signed "Jenny and Will Huston," and in which the defendant, among other things, said: "We made out the mortgage on our house just as mother wanted it, so you see that everything is alright." On February 5, 1911, after Mrs. Chalvet's return to California, the defendant sent her a letter in German, [80] in which he said: "We hope that you all do very well. You may tell to Pet, that we will do the right thing. You need not be worried about it."

The defendant testified that the $2,100 was given his wife by Mrs. Chalvet; and that he and his wife "agreed to give Mrs. Chalvet a home with them as long as she lived, as well as provide a home for her husband, Mr. Peter Chalvet, the plaintiff, in this case, he to pay board for himself at the rate of $30 per month;" and that to secure the carrying out of this agreement as to Mrs. Chalvet the defendant and his wife executed a mortgage which provided that in consideration of the payment of $2,100 the Hustons would support, maintain, and provide a comfortable home for Mrs. Chalvet during her life. The mortgage contained no power of sale, and was to cease and determine upon the death of Mrs. Chalvet, who retained it in her possession without recording it until she was about to return to California, when she gave it back to the defendant. The money secured from the draft finally found its way into the joint bank account of the Hustons, and Mrs. Huston used several hundred dollars of it to purchase a piano, furniture, and various household necessities. At a later date there was deposited the balance of $1,100 in her individual account. The defendant further testified that in April, 1911, he secured a loan, through other sources, of $1,800 upon his property for the purpose of taking up the existing mortgage thereon. There was some further evidence tending to show that Mrs. Chalvet had expressed the intent to give Mrs. Huston the money which she brought East.

Samuel Herrick, Joseph W. Cox and Joseph T. Sherrier for appellant.

Claude W. Owen and George C. Shinn for appellee.

ROBB, J. (after stating the facts).—It was error to exclude the testimony of the plaintiff as to [81] the contents of the lost letter which his wife had read to him. Gulliford v. McQuillen, 75 Kan. 454, 89 Pac. 927; Ryland v. Heney, 130 Cal. 426, 62 Pac. 616. The letter having been lost, and the person who read it to the plaintiff having died, the testimony offered was the best evidence obtainable. The weight of such evidence, however, is for the determination of the jury. Laster v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663; Apperson v. Dowdy, 82 Va. 776, 1 S. E. 105.

Having in mind the oft-repeated rule that a verdict should be directed only where, accepting as true every fact offered in evidence by the plaintiff, with every reasonable inference deducible therefrom, a conclusion utterly opposed to plaintiff's right to recover would be reached by all fair-minded men. (City, etc. R. Co. v. Cooper, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 550), we think the court erred in directing a verdict in the present case. There was evidence, as we have seen, tending to show that the defendant, whose home was encumbered, wrote the plaintiff for a loan. It is clearly established that the plaintiff, who was under no obligations to the defendant, sent $2,100 of his, the plaintiff's, own funds, which the defendant and his wife received. That the defendant knew that this was not a gift, and knew that the plaintiff did not so understand it, is evident from his own letter to the plaintiff of December 15, 1910, wherein he informed the plaintiff that "we made out the mortgage on our house just as mother wanted it, so you see that everything is alright." That this money was not actually used in liquidating the encumbrance on defendant's home is merely a circumstance to be taken into consideration, with all the other facts and circumstances of the case. It was for the jury to say whether the failure of the defendant thus to apply the money was not a part of a scheme to appropriate it, and it was equally for the jury to say under the evidence whether the defendant did not really receive the benefit of it.

Judgment reversed, with costs, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Reversed and remanded.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that a person to whom a letter has been read may testify as to its contents where it appears that no better evidence of the contents is available, the letter being lost and the person who read it being dead. The earlier cases discussing the competency of testimony as to the contents of a document by a witness whose knowledge is based wholly on hearing it read are reviewed in the note to Lacy v. Meador, Ann. Cas. 1912D 787.

STATE

v.

LASECKI.

Ohio Supreme Court—February 24, 1914.

90 Ohio St. 10; 106 N. E. 660.

Trial — Objection — Evidence Partly Admissible.

Where the question put to a witness is competent, or not objected to by counsel, and the witness answers, a part of which answer is competent and a part incompetent, a general objection to the whole answer is properly overruled, even though there be some objectionable matter in the answer. To save the objector's rights he should clearly indicate the part of the answer to which he objects and move its exclusion. If the court overrules such motion, he should then save his exception.

Evidence — Res Gestae — Declaration of Infant at Time of Homicide.

The exclamation of a boy four years of age that "the bums killed pa with a broomstick," which was made from 10 to 30 seconds after a fatal assault upon his father, made in the boy's presence, is competent evidence to go to the jury as explanatory and illustrative of the manner and means by which the father was assaulted. The utterance of the boy under such circumstances, made at the earliest opportunity to make an outcry in the presence and hearing of others, was the spontaneous and impulsive language of the situation, free from any subterfuge, artifice or motive to fabricate. Its weight, however, is purely a question for the jury.

[See note at end of this case.]

Scope of Res Gestae Generally.

The doctrine of res gestae, as applied to exclamations, should have its limits determined, not by the strict meaning of the word "contemporaneous," but rather by the causal, logical, or psychological relation of such exclamations with the primary facts in controversy.

[See 10 R. C. L. tit. Evidence, p. 974.]

Same.

This doctrine applies equally to participants, bystanders and persons incompetent to be witnesses.

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Court of Appeals, Cuyahoga county.

Criminal action. John Lasecki convicted in Court of Common Pleas of homicide. Judgment reversed by Court of Appeals. State brings error. REVERSED.

[11] On the evening of January 1, 1913. Mike Zacharias, in company with his little son, aged about four years, and certain other men, visited the saloon of his brother, William Zacharias, in Berea street, Berea.

Across the street from William Zacharias' saloon, another saloon was kept by a man by the name of Frank Niec. Between ten and eleven o'clock in the evening, the defendant, John Lasecki, accompanied by John Wisniewski and Ignatz Maslinski, left Niec's place. Just before they left, Niec passed two clubs over the bar to them. Some few minutes later they returned to Niec's place, without clubs, and went into a side room. At about this time Mike Zacharias was killed in the street not far distant from Niec's place.

Testimony was also offered tending to show that several others left Zacharias' saloon with the deceased at about this time, including the deceased's little son. The party left the saloon for the purpose of taking a car to Cleveland. As they walked towards the car Mike and his son were the last of the party. An altercation was heard between Mike and some other men not of his party. The sound of two or three blows, as if by a club, was heard by the men ahead of him. One or more of these men ran back and found the deceased lying on the ground and also saw some men running away. As they came up to where Mike was lying, the boy, in a nervous and much frightened state of mind, said, "The bums killed pa with a broomstick." The boy was then about twenty-five feet away from his [12] father and out of the hearing of those who were fleeing from the scene of the attack.

The above statement of facts is taken verbatim from the opinion of the court of appeals, and it is on this exclamation of the boy that the court of appeals reversed the judgment of conviction obtained in the common pleas court, and which judgment of reversal the state asks to have reversed in this court.

Cyrus Locher, Samuel Doerfler and P. J. Mulligan, for plaintiff in error.

Henry DuLaurence for defendant in error.

WANAMAKER, J.—Was the exclamation of the boy competent testimony?

Both sides agree that this is the only question in the case, and that the testimony is competent only upon the theory that it is a part of the res gestae of the case.

The record discloses that the exclamation arose in the following manner:

"Q. You may tell if anything unusual happened there and what it was, anything out of the ordinary? A. We was walking about one hundred and fifty feet from the car, maybe two hundred, I couldn't tell you, and I heard the hitting twice, like that (indicating), and think there was an argument started and the boy said that the bums had killed his papa with a broomstick. Objection. Objection overruled. Exception."

It will be noted that there was no objection to [13] the question, and that the objection is to the whole answer.

Now, manifestly, the major part of the answer is competent and responsive to the question. If the exclamation of the boy be incompetent, the objection of counsel should have been addressed to that exclamation, asking an order from the court to exclude it from the consideration of the jury. But that was not done. Where objection is made to the entire answer, part of which is competent and part incompetent, there is but one thing for the trial judge to do, that is to overrule the objection, and in this case there was no error on the part of the trial court.

But we are not disposed to decide a case of this importance upon the mere failure of counsel to properly save his rights, and shall consider the case on its merits, as if the objection and exception had been properly made.

Was the exclamation a part of the res gestae?

Wharton's definition of res gestae is as follows: "Those circumstances which are the undersigned incidents of particular litigated acts, and are admissible where illustrative of such acts. These incidents may be separated from the act by lapse of time more or less appreciable. Their sole distinguishing feature is that they should be necessary incidents of the litigated act—necessary in this sense: that they are part of the immediate preparations for, or emanations from, such acts, and are not produced by the calculated policy of the actors. In other words, they must stand in immediate causal relation to the act—a relation not broken by individual [14] wariness seeking to manufacture evidence for itself. Therefore declarations which are the immediate accompaniments of an act are admissible as part of the res gestae; remembering that immediateness is tested by closeness, not of time but by causal relation, as just explained." 7 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, 6130.

Again, Wharton says res gestae are the facts which form the environment of a litigated issue.

Bishop, in his New Criminal Procedure (2 ed.), Section 1085, uses the following: "But it is difficult, perhaps impossible, to formulate an available rule as to what shall be deemed of the transaction, and what shall not. It appears safe to say that the subsidiary act need not transpire at the same instant with the main one, or always even on the same day; and, in reason, as well as in accordance with the current of the authorities, the time which divides the two is not the controlling consideration, though it may be taken into the account. Is it presumable that, distinctly and palpably, it influenced or was influenced by the main act, or proceeded from the same motive? If so, it is admissible, otherwise not."

Again, the same author, in Section 1086, uses this language: "The admissibility of particular acts being conceded, whatever of a nature explanatory thereof was during their performances said, whether by the doers or by the lookers-on, by the parties to the litigation, or by third persons, may, subject to some apparent or real qualifications, be given in evidence whenever the acts are. . . . In a general sense, the declarations from whatever [15] source must, to be thus admissible, be contemporaneous with the act they would illustrate. We may have cases apparently requiring them to be strictly so. But it is, at least, the better doctrine that they are competent whenever near enough to the act either before or after it, to be probably prompted by the same motive, not an after-thought, and apparently to constitute of it a part; otherwise they are not competent."

Professor Wigmore, in his excellent work on Evidence, Vol. 3, Sections 1745 to 1747, discusses this same question with large ability and logical analysis, showing the foundation of the principle in the doctrine of res gestae as applicable to exclamations and as constituting a striking exception to the hearsay rule.

In Section 1747 the author uses this language: "This general principle is based on the experience that, under certain external circumstances of physical shock, a stress of nervous excitement may be produced which stills the reflective faculties and removes their control, so that the utterance which then occurs is a spontaneous and sincere response to the actual sensations and perceptions already produced by the external shock. Since this utterance is made under the immediate and uncontrolled domination of the senses, and during the brief period when considerations of self-interest could not have been brought fully to bear by reasoned reflection, the utterance may be taken as particularly trustworthy (or, at least, as lacking the usual grounds of untrustworthiness), and thus as expressing the real tenor of the speaker's belief as to [16] the facts just observed by him; and may therefore be received as testimony to those facts. The ordinary situation presenting these conditions is an affray or a railroad accident. But the principle itself is a broad one. Its phrasings differ widely in different courts; but there is in the judicial opinion of to-day something of an approach to uniformity."

The author cites a large number of cases in support of the doctrine.

It is impossible to reconcile the multitude of diverse decisions by courts of last resort on the proper scope and limitations of the old phrase res gestae. Many of the states follow reverently and rigidly the old English rule, that before any exclamation is admissible in evidence on the theory of res gestae, it must be contemporaneous in time with the principal fact in litigation. That is, just as soon as it appears that it is subsequent in time to the principal fact and merely narrative of it, such exclamation is not a part of the res gestae and is, therefore, not admissible.

This old English rule had its birth in a strange combination of circumstances. First, the inhumanity and barbarity of the penalties provided by the English law for criminal cases. A century ago two hundred crimes in England were punishable by death. Second, the prisoner had no rights in an English court of justice, save the right to be convicted. He was not competent as a witness in his own behalf, nor indeed were any members of his family. He was not allowed the privilege of having his own counsel address the jury, and indeed, in earlier days, was not even allowed the privilege of [17] counsel. He had no right of appeal, and many other prerogatives now enjoyed by the defendants were wholly unknown to the English law a century or more ago.

With these barbarous penalties and this outrageously unjust procedure it is little wonder that the humanity of the judge as well as his love of legal casuistry should resort to a strained and technical construction of the law to overcome its barbarity.

Now, while this was none the less judge-made law, its evils were much mitigated by the fact that it was done in the name of justice and humanity. The judge's love for justice was greater than his love for law. These were the circumstances and conditions of the English law that gave rise to the technical formalism and procedure in English criminal courts a century and more ago.

Naturally no other country has had as great an influence on our American courts as have our English brethren, because of our speaking a common language and having a common law as well as a multitude of varied and very common interests. This procedure was adopted in many of our states, though the English cruel and barbarous conditions as to penalties and procedure never prevailed in such states; but such is the force of precedent that the English doctrine was faithfully followed by many of the courts of last resort, without the least justification for such superstrict interpretation of the rights of the accused or such over-refined distinctions as to both the substantive and adjective law of the state.

[18] The second class of states practically ignored the old English doctrine of contemporaneous character of facts or exclamation and considered chiefly the causal connection or logical relation that the secondary facts sustain to the primary facts in controversy.

Now, applying the doctrine or test of causation, it would be expected not infrequently that there would be an appreciable interval between cause and effect, between those things that have a logical relation, such as the commission of an act and an impulsive exclamation concerning the same.

That the natural language of a given situation or environment would not always be contemporaneous with the primary fact is quite obvious. But is it, therefore, any less a part or incident of the primary fact of the situation? The outcry of the injured party immediately after the assault should be as relevant as during the assault, because he may be bound and gagged or unconscious by reason of an assault, so that he could not make an outcry, which, if made during the assault, would be competent according to all authorities; but by reason of its being delayed ten or twelve seconds after the assault it would not then be competent. This makes the relevancy or relation of the facts turn on a few paltry seconds of time rather than upon the natural and logical relation of the facts.

Now, when the exclamation is the combined result of the tragic circumstances of the situation making an awful and fearful impression upon the human mind, especially that of a child seeing its own father murderously assaulted, the child being [19] overwhelmed with fear and grief because of the darkness of the night, the absence of a helping hand, grief of parental loss, with nobody to appeal to, all these combined placing the child under natural and extreme excitement, and then, after a few seconds, some one comes into his presence to help, what is more natural, indeed necessary, in such situation than just such an exclamation as we have in this case, "The bums killed pa with a broomstick"?

The language proceeds from impulse, from the natural and necessary impressions made by the acts of the parties in controversy, so that the human mind in its helplessness or despair, or its natural and necessary anxiety, acts under an impulse or a spontaneous influence that is a sort of echo or reaction from the general situation. The time limit recognized by those courts that fall under this second class which disregard the strict contemporary character, is placed at a point where there is no opportunity given for fabricating or manufacturing some statement or story according to one's self-interest.

If the father had made some declaration during the assault all authorities agree that it would be competent, but if he had been unconscious or partially unconscious by reason of the severity of the assault, so that he was unable to make any exclamation until a minute or so afterward, would his exclamation be therefore incompetent? We think this is too much like hairsplitting.

But it is said the boy was not participating, that [20] he was a mere bystander, and that therefore his exclamations are not competent.

Under the old English rule this was true. But what reason could possibly exist for such a rule, excepting the bald protection of the defendant, it is difficult to understand. Ordinarily in other cases bystanders are presumed to be rather more impartial, more disinterested, than those who are the active participants, and the average mind would feel this fact should rather strengthen the probative force of the exclamation than weaken it.

Again, it is urged that the boy was not old enough to be a witness, and therefore his exclamation should not be admitted. But exclamations are not admitted on the ground of the legal competency of the person making them, but because they are a part or reflection of the transaction. By the same token the growl of a dog or the neighing of a horse is also competent as res gestae. The exclamation in this case should be just as competent, yes more so, than the exclamation of a female person who has been assaulted in a case of rape, which the authorities all agree is allowed as a part of the natural and necessary language of a person who has been brutally assaulted, though the exclamation may be made even some days after the occurrence of the criminal assault if there be a reasonable explanation for the delay.

An interesting incident in the life of Lincoln will serve to illustrate these involuntary acts upon the part of children that are really only a reflection, a natural sequence to certain prior facts. His biographer, Holand, says: "At one time Abraham [21] was obliged to take his grist upon the back of his father's horse and go fifty miles to get it ground. The mill itself was very crude and driven by horse power. The customers were obliged to wait their turn without reference to their distance from home, and then use their own horse to propel the machinery. On one occasion Abraham having arrived at his turn fastened his mare to the lever and was following her closely upon her rounds. When urging her with a switch and 'clucking' to her in the usual way, he received a kick from her which prostrate him and made him insensible. With the first instant of returning consciousness he finished the 'cluck.'" This was one of the most striking and convincing facts as to what Abraham was doing when he became unconscious. What stronger proof that he was driving the horse could be given than this exclamation as soon as consciousness returned?

So, in the case at bar, the causal, logical and psychological relation of the whole situation as affecting the boy and his innocent, spontaneous, impulsive, natural and necessary outcry was exactly in keeping with all human experience and what all men recognize in everyday life as tending to prove certain facts. Why should not the same rules obtain in courts of justice to prove the same kind of facts? The rules of evidence are presumed to be based upon the credibility of human experience.

A most interesting case from Georgia. Grant v. State, 124 Ga. 757, 53 S. E. 334, is singularly analogous to the case at bar:

"4. Exception was taken to the refusal of the court to exclude the following testimony: 'Mary's [22] [deceased's] child said, "Huss [defendant], you have shot mama.'" The testimony quoted was that of Jake Colbert, a witness for the state, and it was objected to on the ground that the solicitor-general, in opening the case to the jury, had stated that Mary Johnson's [deceased's] child, the one referred to by the witness Colbert, was too young to be a competent witness or to testify.' And movant adds that this (the foregoing statement of the solicitor-general) 'was true, and allowing Colbert to testify as to what the child said was in effect allowing the child to testify.' We can not agree with counsel that permitting the witness to testify to the words of a little child, too young to be brought into court as a witness, was equivalent to permitting the child itself to testify. It appears from the evidence that the witness Colbert, at the sound of the shots which slew the deceased, ran immediately from an adjoining room into the one where the homicide was committed, and said twice to the defendant, 'Have you shot Mary?' The defendant made no answer, but the child, as the defendant silently left the room, uttered the words, 'Huss, you have shot mama.' These words, spoken by a little child immediately after the shocking occurrence, were clearly admissible as a part of the res gestae. No declaration could have been freer 'from all suspicion of device or afterthought,' and it was, in point of time, almost concurrent with the act to which it referred. It was the very dead itself speaking through the mouth of a babe."

In another case the supreme court of Georgia, in Kirk v. State, 73 Ga. 620, held as follows: "Evidence [23] that immediately after the deceased was shot, a person near by hallooed and asked him what was the matter, and who had shot him, to which he replied that the defendant had shot him, was admissible both as part of the res gestae and as corroborating the dying declarations of the deceased."

The supreme court of Minnesota, in State v. Williams, 96 Minn. 351, 105 N. W. 265, held a statement, to the effect that the defendant shot the deceased and herself, made by a party other than the deceased, but who was mortally wounded at the time of the homicide, and made in close connection with the event, and under circumstances precluding any suspicion of fabrication, was properly received in evidence.

The court in its decision uses this language: "It is the contention of the defendant that the statement in question was simply the narration of a past transaction and not so connected with the main fact, the shooting, as to illustrate its character. On the other hand, the state claims that the evidence was clearly admissible as a part of the res gestae. We are of the opinion that the evidence was properly received. The record shows that Mrs. Keller was one of the victims of the tragedy; that her statement or declaration to Mrs. Kline was made within a few minutes after the shooting took place. It was not mere self-serving, hearsay evidence; for the statement was a natural and instinctive declaration, made in close a connection with the shooting and under circumstances precluding any suspicion of fabrication." The evidence was admitted as a part of the res gestae.

[24] In an unreported case of Collins v. Com. 70 S. W. 187, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 884, the following is held: "The exclamations of the wife and daughter of H. immediately succeeding the shooting were competent as a part of the res gestae."

The supreme court of Illinois has held in 104 Ill. 248, Lander v. People, as follows: "The true test of the admissibility of such testimony is that the act, declaration or exclamation must be so intimately interwoven with the principal fact or event which it characterizes, as to be regarded a part of the transaction itself, and also to clearly negative any premeditation or purpose to manufacture testimony."

Under this doctrine the court held no error was committed on the trial of one upon the charge of rape, where two witnesses were called who were near by and witnessed the perpetration of the offense and testified that they saw and readily recognized the accused near the scene of the transaction on the next day thereafter, and that one called the attention of the other to the accused, exclaiming "There goes the man!" and that the other replied, "Yes, there he goes." The defendant objected, to the witnesses repeating their exclamations made at the time, but the court permitted the same.

Many more decisions under the same line might be cited and discussed, but the best-considered cases where the courts have gotten away from the old English rule prefer the test of causal connection, logical or psychological relation and association as the true and proper test of relevancy.

[25] Underhill in his excellent work on Criminal Evidence (2 ed.) Section 93, p. 174, uses this language: "These declarations must possess three characteristics: First, they must have been uttered contemporaneously with and grow out of the act upon which they have a bearing so as to be spontaneous and not narrative; second, they must qualify, illustrate, explain or unfold its character or significance, so as, third, to be connected with it in such a manner that the declaration and the act form a single and indivisible transaction."

This doctrine would seem to disqualify the exclamation according to the author's judgment. But just prior to this rule announcing the qualifications necessary to admit the evidence, he uses this language, Sec. 93, p

173: "Usually statements made by third persons not produced as witnesses are objectionable as hearsay. But, it has been remarked, here the events speak for themselves, giving out their fullest meaning through the unprompted language of the participants. The spontaneous character of the language is assumed to preclude the probability of its premeditation or fabrication. Its utterance on the spur of the moment is regarded, with a good deal of reason, as a guarantee of its truth. These instinctive utterances are as much original evidence as are the events whence they emanate or of which they form an inseparable part. Their value as evidence does not depend in the slightest degree upon our confidence in the credibility of the declarant, or upon our knowledge of him as a man who habitually tells the truth. He is regarded merely as the channel through which [26] events described themselves contemporaneously, or nearly so, with their occurrence."

So that, taking all that Underhill says upon this subject, it is apparent that he does not intend to give the word "contemporaneously" that strict construction required by the English rule, but the liberal construction, which he indicates by the language "or nearly so," that is now recognized and applied by many of our American states.

To cite other authorities would be superfluous. We feel, however, that it is but just to say that the judgment of the court of appeals in this case finds abundant warrant in the former decisions of this court in analogous cases.

We believe, however, that the demands of justice, as well as the probative force and effect of such exclamations made where there is a maximum probability as to their truth and a minimum possibility of artifice or fabrication by reason of their being the natural, spontaneous and, sometimes, as in this case, the necessary language of a child, require that the old rule should be relaxed and liberalized so as to meet the naturalness and necessities of the case, as well as to put the jury and court in possession of all the facts, circumstances and environment immediately before and after the principal fact in controversy.

The state contended before the court of appeals that, if the admission of the boy's exclamation was error, such error was not prejudicial, because, first, the word "bums" identified nobody, and second, there was other evidence tending to show that the fatal wound was made with a stick or a club. This [27] contention of the state was overruled by the court of appeals, and in this respect the court was undoubtedly right. The exclamation of the boy under the circumstances, that it was made in its relation to the transaction, being the sole eyewitness save and except the defendant, speaking under great excitement and impulse, freed from opportunity or occasion to dissemble or fabricate—all these things undoubtedly gave the boy's exclamation great weight with the court and jury. But the primary reason for such great weight was by reason of its causal connection, its logical relation to the facts in the case, and because it was the natural language of the whole situation speaking through the little boy. That relation made it competent, though it be not strictly contemporaneous.

We find no other error in the record of the court of appeals. The judgment of the court of appeals is reversed and the judgment of the court of common pleas is affirmed, and cause remanded to the court of common pleas for further proceedings according to law.

Judgment reversed.

Nichols, C. J., Johnson, Donahue, Newman and Wilkin, JJ., concur.

NOTE.

Declarations of Infant at Time of Assault or Homicide as Part of Res Gestae.

In Homicide Case.

There are a number of decisions in accord with the holding of the reported case that the declarations of a child made at the time of a homicide are a part of the res gestae and may therefore be given in evidence by a person who hears them. Shirley v. State, 144 Ala. 35, 40 So. 269; Grant v. State, 124 Ga. 757, 33 S. E. 334; Berry v. State, 9 Ga. App. 868, 72 S. E. 433; Kennedy v. Com. 100 S. W. 242, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1063; Hunter v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. 224, 114 S. W. 124, 130 Am. St. Rep. 887; Wynne v. State, 59 Tex. Crim. 126, 127 S. W. 213; Redman v. State (Tex.) 149 S. W. 670. See also Collins v. Com. 70 S. W. 187, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 884. Thus in Berry v. State, supra, testimony that a child of twelve years, immediately after a killing by shooting, in answer to a question as to what the matter was replied that "Henry Berry has shot Velma," was held to be a part of the res gestae. The court said: "A child so young, in the presence of such a tragedy, with excitement which such an occurrence would naturally produce on her mind, could not do any after-thinking in such a brief period of time. Her declarations were spontaneous and almost involuntary acts; just as much so as would be an exclamation of pain if her hand had come in contact with a red-hot iron. This being so, the fundamental requirement of the res gestae rule was complied with." So in Kennedy v. Com. 30 Ky. L.

Rep. 1063, 100 S. W. 242, it was held that the exclamation, "Don't shoot pap," by a child instantly before the shooting of his father might be testified to by a person who heard it, as it was a part of the transaction. In Grant v. State, 124 Ga. 757, 53 S. E. 334, a witness was permitted to testify that a young child, immediately after the murder of her mother said, "Huss, you have shot mamma." Likewise in Shirley v. State, 144 Ala. 35, 40 So. 269, which was a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, a mother was allowed to testify that her daughter exclaimed, about the time a gun was fired, "Hold! look! look! there is uncle Isaac and uncle Jesse going to shoot us."

In State v. Brown, 64 Mo. 367, however, an exclamation of an infant was excluded on the ground that it was not a part of the res gestae. It appeared in that case, which was a prosecution for murder, that a girl nine years old, immediately after a fatal shooting, while the victim was lying where he had fallen exclaimed that "Mr. Long had a knife in his hand." The court said: "It was no part of the res gestae. It was after Long was killed. If the exclamation had been made while Long was approaching, and before the fatal shot was fired, it would not perhaps have been hearsay, but a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining whether defendant was acting under an apprehension that deceased was about to assail him with a deadly weapon." After the fight was over the exclamation could not be a part of the res gestae, and the child could have testified as to what she saw." And in Lewis v. State (Miss.) 68 So. 785, it was held that a declaration made to a person accused of murder a few minutes after the fatal shot was fired that "you killed my poor father not for a thing in the world; he hadn't done a thing," was not admissible as a part of the res gestae. The case is not clear as to whether the declarant was an infant.

The fact that the infant who made the declaration is incompetent to testify is not a valid objection to the admissibility of his declarations where they are found to be a part of the res gestae. Grant v. State, 124 Ga. 757, 53 S. E. 334; Hunter v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. 224, 114 S. W. 124, 130 Am. St. Rep. 887. And see the reported case, in Grant v. State, supra, the court said: "We cannot agree with counsel that permitting the witness to testify to the words of a little child, too young to be brought into court as a witness, was equivalent to permitting the child itself to testify. It appears from the evidence that the witness Colbert, at the sound of the shots which slew the deceased, ran immediately from an adjoining room into the one where the homicide was committed, and said twice to the defendant, 'Have you shot Mary?' The defendant made no answer, but the child, as the defendant silently left the room, uttered the words, 'Huss, you have shot mamma.' These words, spoken by a little child immediately after the shocking occurrence, were clearly admissible as a part of the res gestae. No declaration could have been freer 'from all suspicion of device or afterthought,' and it was, in point of time, almost concurrent with the act to which it referred. It was the very deed itself, speaking through the mouth of a babe." No opposite view, however, was taken on this point in Adams v. State, 34 Fla. 185, 15 So. 905, wherein evidence was excluded that a child three and one-half years old exclaimed, "Oh Man, why have you shot my papa," and that at the same time he said to his mother: "Oh, mamma, there's two men out there, there's a white man and a negro, the white man's face was all covered with a beard." The court said: "We think the whole of the child's exclamations and utterances on the occasion should have been excluded. If, nearly two years after the occurrence, this child, with its increased age, was found by the court not to have sufficient comprehension and intelligence to be competent as a witness, it would seem superfluous to say that, at the time of the occurrence, when he was two years younger, he would hardly have been possessed of sufficient discrimination or intelligence to comprehend passing events with anything like such accuracy as to render his exclamations or observations in reference thereto at all reliable, or admissible as evidence even though they may have been part of the res gestae. The whole of this child's exclamations and sayings should have been excluded."

In Case of Assault on Infant.

In case of an assault on a child it is well settled that his declarations made at the time of the assault or soon thereafter are admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestae. Soto v. Territory, 12 Ariz. 36, 94 Pac. 1104 (one hour and a half after the assault); People v. Barney, 114 Cal. 554, 47 Pac. 41; Territory v. Godfrey, 6 Dak. 46, 50 N. W. 481; Snowden v. U. S. 2 App. Cas. (D. C.) 89; McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 303 (about one hour after assault; decided under res gestae statute); Pool v. State (Tex.) 23 S. W. 391; Croomes v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. 672, 51 S. W. 924, 53 S. W. 883; Kenney v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 817, 65 L.R.A. 316; Thomas v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 534, 84 S. W. 823, 122 Am. St. Rep. 712 (twenty minutes after assault); Valdez v. State, 71 Tex. Crim. 487, 160 S. W. 341 (twenty minutes after assault). In People v. Colletta, 65 App. Div. 570, 72 N. Y. S. 903, affirmed 169 N. Y. 609, 62 N. E. 1099, which was a prosecution for indecent assault there appears to have been no objection raised to the admission of testimony that the victim of the outrage, a child of five years, had exclaimed more than once at the time of the assault "You hurt me! Stop that."

Declarations of an assaulted child will, however, be excluded where they are not so closely connected with the assault itself as to form a link in the transaction. Thus in State v. Pollard, 174 Mo. 607, 74 S. W. 969, which was a prosecution for feloniously assaulting a girl fourteen years of age it appeared that some time during the morning of the assault the girl made certain statements in regard thereto to a person who at the trial attempted to relate what was told to her. In excluding the evidence the court said: "This statement that 'George forced me' was no sudden exclamation, contemporaneous with the act constituting the offense. Defendant was out in the back yard—was not present. Carrie Downing removed the chair from the door, returned, and was sitting on the bed, combing her hair. This was not all. This declaration was not made to Eva Enoch immediately upon opening the door, but, on the contrary, she at first refused to say anything. Finally she made the statement. The testimony of Eva Enoch, instead of indicating that this statement was a sudden exclamation, following closely the act itself, shows that it was extracted from Carrie Downing after pressing her to tell what was the matter. This, clearly, was no part of the res gestae, and was inadmissible." This question as to when declarations and conversations are admissible as being a part of the res gestae is fully discussed in a recent opinion of this court. . . . In that case all of this division concurred, and the conclusion was reached that such statements, in order to be admissible, must happen contemporaneous with the main act, and be so closely connected with it as to form a part of it. It was error to admit this testimony, and it was the duty of the court, upon objection by defendant, to exclude it."

The rule in the case of an assault on an infant, as in homicide cases, is that the fact that the child is incompetent to testify is not a valid reason for the exclusion of its declarations where they are a part of the res gestae. Soto v. Territory, 12 Ariz. 36, 94 Pac. 1104; Croomes v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. 672, 51 S. W. 924, 53 S. W. 883; Thomas v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 534, 84 S. W. 823, 122 Am. St. Rep. 712; Kenney v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 817, 65 L.R.A. 316.

RICE

v.

BOARD OF LICENSE COMMISSIONERS OF CENTRAL FALLS.

Rhode Island Supreme Court—November 19, 1913.

36 R. I. 50; 88 Atl. 885.

Intoxicating Liquors — "Premises" of School — Meaning of Term.

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 123, § 2, provides that no liquor license shall be issued to a place within 200 feet, measured by any public traveled way, of the premises of any school. A church owned land on H. street, with a building thereon, 80 feet from the street, the basement of which was used as a parochial school, with a space on each side for yard, with a gate on the street at about the middle of the lot, and a double gate at the northwest corner thereof opening on a driveway on the northerly side of the building, with a post near the northwest corner of the building, both gates being used as means of access by the pupils, who were told not to play in front of the building. The distance from a point on the east side of H. street opposite the southwest corner of a licensed place along the street to the northwest corner of the school lot was 154 feet, and, when prolonged for 200 feet from the starting point, the line extended across the entrance to the middle gate; but a line from the same point of beginning to the post near the corner of the lot, then turning east and extending along and across the driveway to the post, measured 240 feet. Held, that the term "premises," in reference to real estate, usually includes appurtenances, and that as applied to the school included the school yard, driveway, and paths, so that the licensed building was within 200 feet of the school; the fact that the driveway was used by other persons for bringing coal, etc., not making it a "public traveled way." [See note at end of this case.]

What Constitutes Tavern.

Under Gen. Laws 1909, c. 123, § 2, forbidding the granting of a liquor license to a place within 200 feet of any public or parochial school or to any place except taverns licensed on May 22, 1909, the place must be used as a tavern, and it is not sufficient to show that it was at that time licensed as a tavern, even though such license might afford presumptive evidence that it was so used.

Petition for writ of certiorari. Herbert A. Rice, petitioner, and Board of License Commissioners of Central Falls, respondents. The facts are stated in the opinion: PETITION GRANTED.

James A. Williams for petitioner.

John N. Butman and Edward D. Bassett for respondents.

[51] BAKER, J.—This is a petition for a writ of certiorari filed October 20, 1913, by Herbert A. Rice, Attorney General, against John Pearson, Arnold A. Allenson and Jeremiah A. Sherman. The essential allegations of the petition are in [52] substance that said Pearson, Allenson and Sherman were before and on December 1, 1912, and are now the persons constituting the Board of License Commissioners of the City of Central Falls, in this State; that, claiming to act under the provisions of Sec. 2 of Chap. 123 of the Gen. Laws of the State, said commissioners prior to December 1, 1912, upon his application therefor, granted to one William E. Ryan of said city a second class liquor license to sell intoxicating liquors in a certain building or place in said city situate on the corner of Cross and High Streets, numbered 401 and 403, on said High Street, and 45 on said Cross Street; that afterwards on January 13, 1913, upon his application, said license was transferred by said board to one Issachar G. Giberson, and that afterwards, on or about May 24, 1913, upon his application, said board transferred said license to one John Klich, who now holds said license, and ever since said May 24, has sold and is now selling intoxicating liquors at said place under said license; that the building in and for which said license was granted at the time of granting thereof and of said transfers was and is now located "within two hundred feet, measured by a public travelled way," namely, said High Street, of the premises of St. Joseph's Parochial School, which is conducted by St. Joseph's Church, a corporation for religious purposes; that said Sec. 2 contains this provision, namely, "nor shall any license be granted for the sale of such liquors in any building or place, except taverns that were licensed on the twenty-second day of May, nineteen hundred eight, within two hundred feet, measured by any public travelled way of the premises of any public or parochial school;" that neither at the time of the granting of said license nor at present is there a licensed tavern in said building or place licensed to sell liquor as aforesaid; and that for the reasons above stated said commissioners had no right or authority to grant said license and the transfers thereof. Wherefore the petitioner asks that said writ be issued, commanding said commissioners to certify their records of their said [53] proceedings to this court, and that the record of the said several actions of said Board of License Commissioners in the premises may be quashed.

By their answer said commissioners admit all of the foregoing allegations to be true except the one which says that said building or place is within two hundred feet of the premises of said parochial school, measured by a public travelled way, which allegation they specifically deny. They state in addition that the building in which the license was granted was a licensed tavern on May 22, 1908.

The question in dispute is as to the distance of said building or place licensed as aforesaid from the premises of said parochial school, measured by any public travelled way. There is practically no controversy as to the facts, the real question being as to the meaning to be given to the word "premises" upon the evidence in the case.

The evidence shows that said St. Joseph's Church, of Central Falls, owns a parcel of land in said city bounded westerly on High Street 89.32 feet, measuring on its northerly side 181.54 feet, on its easterly side 88.73 feet, and on its southerly side 194.38 feet. Upon this lot said corporation has erected a building, the upper part of which is used as a church, while the lower part or basement has been for five years, and is now occupied and used by the parochial school of said St. Joseph's Church. This building is rectangular in shape, has its western or front end upwards of eighty feet back from High Street, is midway between the northerly and southerly sides of the lot, leaving a considerable space on each side of the building for yard room, and extends back nearly to the east end of the lot. About the middle of the lot fronting on High Street there is a gate with a path leading therefrom to the front step of the church. At the northwest corner of the lot on High Street are double gates opening on a driveway leading back therefrom along the north side of the lot to said building. In front of the church on each side of said path the lot is kept for grass and flowers. At a point near the northwest corner of the church [54] a stone post about four feet high is set in the ground. The parish priest in charge of the church and school had before December 1, 1912, instructed the children not to play to the west of an imaginary line parallel with High Street, passing through this post in front of the building across said lot from north to south; in other words, the children were directed to play in that portion of the lot to the east of said line and not to play in front of the church. The ordinary mode of access to the school from High Street by the pupils was by way of the double gates in the northwest corner of the lot and said driveway. They occasionally came in and went out by the path leading to the front of the church, and apparently they were authoritatively permitted to use either the driveway or the path for that purpose. The southwest corner of said licensed building is about five feet east from High Street, and about three feet north from Cross Street. Measuring from a point on the east side of High Street opposite said southwest corner, along said High Street to the northwest corner of said church lot, the distance is 154 feet, and the prolongation of this line southerly along High Street for 200 feet from the starting point extends across the entrance to the path leading to the middle of the church; but a line drawn from said point of beginning along High Street to said northwest corner of the church lot, then turning east and extending along and across said driveway to said stone post measures 240 feet.

Upon this state of facts the respondents claim that the school premises are limited to that portion of the church property lying to the east of said imaginary line and that therefore said school premises are more than 200 feet from said licensed building, while the petitioner insists that the portions of the lot customarily used in accordance with the directions of the parish priest by the children attending said school, in passing to and from High Street and the school building are part of the school premises.

[55] In Greenough v. Warwick, Town Council, 31 R. I. on page 561, 78 Atl. 262, the court said: "The premises of a public or parochial school can be neither more nor less than the duly constituted authorities, having jurisdiction in the matter, may see fit to appropriate for that purpose;" and also, that what constitutes such premises "is a matter susceptible of proof." The term "premises," as it refers to real estate, is usually held to include appurtenances. As applied to a school, it will properly include in addition to the room or building, where the school holds its sessions, as appurtenant thereto, such portion, if any, of the land whereon it stands as may be apportioned or designated, by proper authority for the use of the school whether in common with others lawfully using said land or otherwise.

Upon the evidence in this case, we are of the opinion that the constituted authority of St. Joseph's Church had appropriated the basement of the building on said lot as the place of study and recitation for said parochial school; that portion of the lot east of said imaginary line not covered by said building as the playground, and the driveway and the path as the portions of said lot to be used by the scholars of said school in attending thereon, and that said basement, schoolyard, driveway and path are part, at least of the premises of said parochial school. The defendants, however, urge that said driveway is a "public travelled way" within the meaning of said Section 2, because said way is shown to be used by other persons having business on the premises, for example, by men bringing coal or taking away ashes. To call such a way "public" would in our judgment be a forced and unnatural construction of the term, is not warranted upon the evidence and is not adopted. The fact that High Street is a "public travelled way" is not questioned. It follows, therefore, that the licensed building in question is "within two hundred feet, measured by a public travelled way of the premises" of said parochial school.

[56] The respondents raise one other point in defence. There is in evidence the bond of William E. Ryan, with sureties, to the Treasurer of Central Falls, dated April 8, 1908, which recites that pursuant to Chapter 101 a license on the day last named had been granted to said Ryan to keep a tavern or hotel in the house numbered 401, 407, on High street, in said city, which license was to be in force, unless sooner revoked, until the first Wednesday in April, 1909, and the respondents claim as a result of the granting of such tavern license that said building and place falls within the exception contained in said Section 2, namely, "except taverns that were licensed on the twenty-second day of May, nineteen hundred eight," so that the prohibition as to licensing a place within 200 feet from the school does not apply to it. This claim, however, is not well founded. And even admitting that the recitals in said bond may afford presumptive evidence that said building was on May 22, 1908, used as a tavern (although an actual use for a particular purpose is not shown by authority to so use) there is no evidence whatever, that after April, 1909, there was any license to keep a tavern in said building or that a tavern was kept there. Said Sec. 2 of Chap. 123 itself declares that the word "tavern" as used in said chapter "shall be construed to mean houses where the principal business is the furnishing of food and sleeping accommodations." Such houses only are recognized as being taverns by this statute and they only are included in the exception. They must be taverns in this sense in order that they may come within the provisions of said exception. It is not enough that they were taverns on May 22, 1908, although that is required. Manifestly it is not sufficient that they simply hold a tavern license when such liquor license is granted. But they must be real taverns in fact in the sense in which that word is defined in Chapter 123 on each occasion when a liquor license is granted to them in order to make the exception applicable to them. The respondents apparently attempt to construe the exception as if it read [57] "except a building or place licensed as a tavern on the 22nd day of May, 1908," which construction, as already indicated, we cannot accept.

As the building in question was not a tavern in December, 1912, or at any time thereafter, it follows that the liquor license to said William E. Ryan and the transfers as aforesaid were granted without lawful authority and are invalid.

The petition therefore is granted and the writ of certiorari is ordered to issue as prayed for.

NOTE.

What Is Included in Term "Premises" as Used with Respect to Land.

Generally, 1192.

In Statute Regulating Sale of Intoxicating Liquor, 1193.

In Will, 1194.

Generally.

When the word "premises" is used with reference to land, it is ordinarily regarded as a general and comprehensive term, embracing the extent of the land, the buildings and appurtenances, and whatever is under the same control and used in the same connection. Doe v. Willets, 7 C. B. 709, 62 E. C. L. 709; Ross v. Veal, 1 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 751; Hibon v. Hibon, 9 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 511; Martin v. Martin, 8 Ont. L. Rep. 462, 24 Occ. N. 367, 3 Ont. W. R. 930; Cory v. State, 4 Port. (Ala.) 186; Swan v. State, 11 Ala. 594; Spencer Stone Co. v. Sedwick, 58 Ind. App. 64, 105 N. E. 525; Greekmore v. Com. (Ky.) 12 S. W. 628; State v. Moore (Miss.) 24 So. 308; Silberman v. Mayer, 48 Misc. 468, 96 N. Y. S. 928; Greenough v. Warwick Town Council, 31 R. I. 559, 78 Atl. 263; Thompson v. Browne, 10 S. D. 344, 73 N. W. 194. See also Winlock v. State, 121 Ind. 531, 23 N. E. 514; McSherry v. Heimer (Minn.) 156 N. W. 130. And see the reported case.

The intention of the one using the word "premises" may determine what it includes. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 3 De G. F. & J. (Eng.) 530, 4 De G. F. & J. 35, 31 L. J. Ch. 737, 30 L. J. Ch. 388; Murphey v. State, 115 Ga. 201, 41 S. E. 685; Old South Ass'n v. Godman, 211 Mass. 211, 97 N. E. 766; Steinhardt v. Burt, 27 Misc. 782, 57 N. Y. S. 751; In re Henry, 142 N. Y. S. 485.

Accordingly, in certain statutes the term "premises" means any real estate. Sandy v. State, 60 Ala. 58; Wright v. State, 136 Ala. 139, 34 So. 233; Matter of Cullinan, 113 App. Div. 485, 99 N. Y. S. 374; Hilton's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 351, 9 Atl. 342. "Trespasses on real estate the statute is intended to prohibit; and any real estate, for an entry on which the prosecutor could maintain a civil action, is within the meaning of the term premises as it is employed in the statute." Sandy v. State, supra.

In other instances, the spirit and purpose of the statute restricts the meaning of "premises." Metropolitan Water Board v. Paine [1907] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 285, 76 L. J. K. B. 151; State v. Wyl, 55 Mo. 67; People v. Shulta, 87 Misc. 348, 149 N. Y. S. 913.

Under a statute authorizing a view of the premises by a jury in assessing damages for the taking of a railroad right of way, it has been held that "the premises" embraced the whole tract of land, over which the railroad passed, both within and without the location of the railroad. Wakefield v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 63 Me. 385, wherein the court said: "The company has no more right to insist that the 'view' shall be made solely from within, than the petitioners have that it shall be made only from without, the location. In order to enable the jury to form a correct judgment of the amount of damages sustained by reason of the location of the railroad, they should 'view the premises' from such standpoints, and in such a manner as will give them an accurate knowledge of the considerations that go to make up the damages, such as the value of the land taken and the use to be made of it, the effect of the severance upon the character, situation, present and prospective use of the remainder of the lot, and any other facts that diminish the value of the premises. . . . It is to be observed in conclusion, that the right of examination is not always co-extensive with the claimant's land, but should be confined within what, under the circumstances of the case, would be reasonable limits."

The word "premises" in a covenant concerning land on a water front includes the accompanying rights and privileges to land under the water. Silberman v. Mayer, 48 Misc. 468, 96 N. Y. S. 928. And a right of way over an adjoining strip of land has been held to be included in the "premises" of a stone quarry. Spencer Stone Co. v. Sedwick, 58 Ind. App. 64, 105 N. E. 525.

Under a charter provision to the effect that it should be the duty of the owner of any premises in the city to lay sidewalks in front thereof when ordered to do so by the city council, it has been held that the term "premises" as therein used included depressed railroad tracks. New York Cent. etc. R. Co. v. Buffalo, 76 Misc. 655, 135 N. Y. S. 196.

Bare land is not included by the term "premises" as used in an act providing that the water company shall on request furnish water to any owner or occupier of premises along certain streets. Metropolitan Water Board v. Paine [1907] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 285, 76 L. J. K. B. 151.

The adjacent street and sidewalk are not included in the "premises" of a property owner or occupant, as that term is used in a charter provision imposing on the owners or occupants of any real estate the duty of "keeping their respective premises at all times in a safe condition, and in a good and thorough state of repair." Amos v. Fond du Lac, 46 Wis. 695, 1 N. W. 346.

Neither the public road over which a rural mail carrier travels nor the buggy in which he travels thereon is included in the "premises" of the mail carrier, as the term is used in a statute allowing "the carrying of arms on one's own premises or place of business." Lattimore v. State, 65 Tex. Crim. 490, 145 S. W. 588.

"Nor was it the legislative intent to include in the phrase 'on his or her own premises,' wild and uninclosed timber or prairie lands, wholly detached from an enclosed field or premises." Baird v. State, 38 Tex. 599.

A barn on the same lot as a barroom but not controlled by the barroom keeper is not included in the "premises" of the barroom. State v. Black, 31 N. C. 378, wherein the court said: "The premises mean those places only, which are occupied by the retailer with the house in which he retails, as one whole. They cannot include a place not occupied by him, nor even let to him. It is nothing, that the two places of retailing and gaming were once occupied together by some one, as parts of the same premises; for, if severed and occupied by different persons, when the gaming occurred, they were then not the same premises."

In State v. Moore (Miss.) 24 So. 308, it appeared that under a statute punishing the use of abusive language when uttered at "the dwelling house of another, or the yard or curtilage thereof, or upon any public highway, or any other place near such premises, and in the presence or hearing of the family," etc., an indictment was drawn charging the use of such language "near the premises" of a certain party. The court said: "The word 'premises' in the indictment does not necessarily, or even ordinarily, mean a dwelling house, or the yard or curtilage thereof. Webster says the word 'premises,' when referring to property, means 'a piece of real estate; a building with its adjuncts.' Manifestly, the indictment is bad."

In a prosecution under a statute prohibiting trespassing on the premises of another, it may be shown that the trespass was committed on any part of the real estate, the term "premises" including more than the curtilage of a dwelling. Wright v. State, 138 Ala. 139, 34 So. 233. Accordingly, the term "premises" includes a pasture over a mile from the prosecutor's dwelling house. Sandy v. State, 60 Ala. 58.

But where it appeared that a store keeper ordered a certain man to leave his (the store keeper's) premises and not to come back, it was held that the order was not notice to the man not to trespass on a meadow owned by the store keeper but situated some distance from the store. Murphey v. State, 115 Ga. 201, 41 S. E. 685, wherein the court said: "The accused was ordered to leave the 'premises' of the prosecutor, and further notified not to again put his foot upon the prosecutor's 'place.' This was not an explicit notice to the accused not to use the much-frequented path across the pasture belonging to the prosecutor. The most natural construction of the language used by the latter was that he did not desire the accused to again enter his store or the premises immediately surrounding the same. It does not appear that the pasture referred to was a part of or even adjacent to these premises."

In Statute Regulating Sale of Intoxicating Liquor.

Under a statute prohibiting the sale of liquor to be drunk on the premises, it has been held that a bench just outside the street-door of a house and touching the wall of the house is included in the premises, it appearing that the person occupying the house had control of the bench. Cross v. Watts, 13 C. B. N. S. 239, 106 E. C. L. 239, 9 Jur. N. S. 776, 32 L. J. M. C. 73, 7 L. T. N. S. 463, 11 W. R. 210. And a bench, fifteen or twenty steps from the house, is on the premises. Swan v. State, 11 Ala. 594. A piazza, connected with the premises, is a part thereof. Matter of Lyman, 25 Misc. 638, 56 N. Y. S. 369.

But a house twenty-five steps off over which the shop keeper has no control is not on the premises of the shop keeper. Downman v. State, 14 Ala. 242. And beer drunk by a person standing on a highway very close to the house where the beer is sold is not drunk "on the premises" of the seller. Deal v. Schofield, L. R. 3 Q. B. (Eng.) 8, 8 B. & S. 760, 37 L. J. M. C. 15, 17 L. T. N. S. 143, 16 W. R. 77. The premises of a brewery include no more than the buildings occupied by and the grounds used in connection with the establishment. Therefore, a saloon situated on the corporation property but operated independently and apart from the brewery is not included in the premises of the brewery. Orke v. McManus (Ia.) 115 N. W. 580. And a house owned by a wine grower situated apart from the vineyard and place of manufacture is not on the "premises" of the wine grower, within the meaning of the term as used in a statute authorizing any wine grower to sell wine "on his own premises." State v. Wyl, 55 Mo. 67, wherein the court said: "By the word 'premises' in the section is undoubtedly intended the place where the wine was produced or manufactured. The premises for production or manufacture need not necessarily be in or upon the vineyard where the grapes are grown. A man may well have his vineyard at one place, and his wine cellar and appliances for making and producing wine at another, and this last place, where the wine was actually made and stored, would be, I think, the premises contemplated by the law. That he could sell there without a license, cannot be for a moment doubted. But if, in addition to this, he could bring his wine into town and sell it out he would be allowed the privilege of selling in two places, and if he can sell in two he can sell in a dozen, and thus he might sell wine all over the county, if he happened to own property in different townships, and call it selling on his premises."

In Creekmore v. Com. (Ky.) 12 S. W. 628, it was held that a distiller's residence is not on the premises of the distillery, when it is situated a mile and a half from the distillery and not connected therewith except by narrow strips of leased land acquired by the distiller for the purpose of evading the law.

In People v. Shults, 87 Misc. 348, 149 N. Y. S. 913, wherein it appeared that premises described as 340 West Pulteney Street in the city of Corning were so situated that the boundary line between the city and the town of Corning ran through the hotel building, the court said: "The only exception under which relator claims the right to a certificate, under the provisions of section 17, is that contained in subdivision 9 of section 8, as follows: 'But this prohibition shall not apply to any premises in which such traffic in liquor was lawfully carried on at some time within one year immediately preceding the passing of this act provided such traffic was not abandoned thereat during the said period.' For more than one year prior to the passage of said act relator had trafficked in liquor at his hotel situate partly in the town and partly in the city of Corning. During such period the traffic had been authorized by a liquor tax certificate issued to relator to traffic in liquors in the town of Corning. The decision of this application depends largely upon the construction given to the word 'premises' as used in the prohibitory clause contained in section 17 which provides that a certificate must be issued unless traffic is prohibited at such premises by virtue of the provisions of subdivision 9 of section 8. I cannot believe that the word 'premises' as there used should be so construed as to permit relator to traffic in liquors in any part of the city of Corning under a certificate authorizing him to traffic in liquors in the town of Corning; or to permit him to traffic in liquors in any part of the town of Corning under a certificate authorizing him to traffic in liquors in the city of Corning. It is true the words 'premises' has been construed to include the building and the land and that the trafficking in liquors at a place for which a liquor tax certificate has been obtained

'comprehends more than the service of liquor over the bar, and may include the distribution of liquor by waiters elsewhere about the place where the bar is located.' In re Lyman, 160 N. Y. 96. In the cases where it has been so construed the 'premises' did not extend into a town in which the traffic in liquor was prohibited by a vote of the electors of such town. By the county treasurer is ordered to issue the certificate asked for, it should appear that traffic in liquors was legally carried on in the 'premises' in question at some time within one year prior to June 15, 1910. He was asked to issue such certificate authorizing such traffic in the city of Corning. As I construe the word 'premises' used in the statute, no such traffic was authorized at the premises for which a certificate is now asked, at any time within one year prior to the enactment of the 'ratio law,' even though relator was within that period trafficking in liquors in another part of his hotel within the town of Corning, under a certificate which authorized such traffic in such hotel in the town of Corning."

In Will.

Where a testator devised to his widow the use for life of the "premises she now lives on" and it appeared that she lived in a house situated on one hundred acres of land, it was held that the entire tract of one hundred acres was included in the devise. Martin v. Martin, 8 Ont. L. Rep. 462, 24 Occ. N. 369, 3 Ont. W. R. 930. Similarly, a devise of a "house and premises" has been held to pass a whole farm, and not merely the house, yard, and immediate appurtenances. Ross v. Veal, 1 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 751. Under a devise of "my messuage and premises situate no. 4 Furnham-green-terrace, etc.," it was held that the devise included a garden across the road from the house but used in connection therewith. Hibon v. Hibon, 9 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 511.

Under a devise of the use of "the mansion houses, gardens, and premises" the term "premises" has been held to include a park and orchard. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 3 D. G. F. & J. (Eng.) 523, 30 L. J. Ch. 389, wherein the court said: "The first question is, what is the meaning of the word 'premises' in that clause—'the mansion houses, gardens and premises'?" In construing the clause, three points seem to me to be necessary to be attended to: first, the terms of the clause; secondly, the context of the will; and, thirdly, what may be termed the surrounding circumstances—the circumstances as they stood at the time when the will was made. Now, as to the terms of the clause, the word 'premises,' as here used seems to me to be used in its popular, and not in its legal sense. I have not been able to find throughout this will any premissa to which the word 'premises,' as here used, can properly be referred. Taking the word 'premises,' then, to be used in the popular sense, two points appear to be clear:—first, that the word 'premises' was intended to extend to something beyond the garden, the terms of the devise being 'the mansion-houses, gardens and premises;' and, secondly, the word 'premises' is large enough to include the park; if it appears, by the context and surrounding circumstances that it was intended to be included. Then there is no doubt, on the other hand, that the word admits of a limited as well as an enlarged sense, and that the context and surrounding circumstances must determine whether it was used in an enlarged or in a limited sense. . . . It is said that the testator, having expressly mentioned the gardens, could not intend so large a property as the park, extending to about one hundred acres, to be affected by the general word 'premises;' and certainly I was much struck with that argument at the time when it was advanced. But, on the other hand, it must be remembered, that what the testator was here dealing with was, an occupation with the consent of the trustees, who would be the judges of what the exigencies of the estate might require. Upon the whole, therefore, I think that, the trustees not objecting, the appellant is entitled to the occupation of the park, including the orchard, which, if not part of the park, is part of the premises." In a later decision of another question arising out of the same will, the court in Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 4 D. G. F. & J. (Eng.) 35, 31 L. J. Ch. 737, said: "The word 'premises,' as used in this clause, must, I think, be taken to mean premises in immediate connection with the mansion, and without the occupation of which the mansion could not be conveniently occupied and enjoyed; and it was upon this ground we held the Petitioner to be entitled to the occupation of the park. . . . Some observations which fell from me when the case was last before the court were relied upon on the part of the petitioner; but what I then said had reference of course to the questions then before us—the occupation of the park—which was in immediate connection with the mansion, and I do not think that the clauses to which I then referred, as indicating an intention as to property in immediate connection with the mansion, can have the same effect attributed to them with reference to this farm, which is more remotely connected with it. As to the other lands, the occupation of which is claimed by this petition, the case is even more difficult than as to the home farm, and I am of opinion, therefore, that this petition must be dismissed."

SWARTZ

v.

BLACK.

Tennessee Supreme Court—April 3, 1915.

131 Tenn. 360; 174 S. W. 1146.

Covenants — Damages — Easement Benefitting Land.

Where, in a suit by a grantee for breach of general covenant of warranty and against incumbrances, because of railroad tracks and rights of way over the land, the evidence shows that the railroads are beneficial to the premises, the grantee cannot recover substantial damages.

Railroad Right of Way as Breach of Covenant.

Railroad tracks in existence and operation across a tract of land, when conveyed by deed containing a covenant of warranty and against incumbrances, are incumbrances, where the grantee, though inspecting the premises before purchase, was misled by the grantor into believing that the railroads were paying rent for the right of way.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Davis county: ARLISON, Chancellor.

Action for damages. H. Schwartz, plaintiff, and J. T. Black, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. MODIFIED.

Verrees & Verrees for appellant.

Samuel N. Harwood and Louis Leftwich for appellee.

[361] NIEL, C. J.—The bill in the present case was filed to recover of defendant damages for breach of a general covenant of warranty, and against incumbrances, contained in a deed which defendant made to complainant on October [362] 14, 1911, for certain land lying in East Nashville on the bank of Cumberland river, just north of the Woodland street bridge. The action is based on the fact that, when the deed was made, there were two railway tracks and rights of way on the lot as follows: 'The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company owned a track and right of way running across the lot in a diagonal direction, thence south to other lots and industries located thereon, the track at its northern end joining another track of the railway at main street, in East Nashville. The conveyance was of a strip of ground sufficiently wide for the construction of a single track railroad, and it provided that, in case the said strip of ground should ever cease to be used for railroad purposes; the title should revert to the makers of the deed, Wm. Sutherland and Charles Graves, the predecessors in title of defendant Black. The consideration was $3,000. This instrument was made May 11, 1889, and filed for registration in Davidson county May 15th of the same year, and duly registered. Subsequently, on the 17th of February, 1904, the standard Lumber & Box Company, then the owner of the lot, supplemented the previous instrument by definitely fixing the limits of the right of way at twenty-five feet; that is to say, twelve and one-half feet on each side of the track. This deed was registered in Davidson county April 19, 1904. There was also a spur track built by the Standard Lumber & Box Company, running out from the diagonal track above mentioned in an eastwardly direction across the lot. The diagonal track referred to [363] was constructed long prior to 1904, and was used by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company as a spur track from its main line to numerous industries lying to the south of the lot in question, also to industries operated on the lot in question.

The other track is known as the Ryman track; the facts concerning which are as follows: The Ryman elevator is located on the bank of the Cumberland river below this lot, and Mr. Ryman and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company desired to extend the "water track" of the railroad company from the elevator up the river, over the frontage of this lot. On July 5, 1903, Sutherland and Graves, the then owners of the lot, for the consideration of $1,000, conveyed to Thomas G. Ryman a right of way along the river front on this lot from its northern boundary to within fifty-five feet of its southern boundary, subject to several reservations, only two of which need be mentioned. One of these was that Sutherland and Graves were to have the right to cross the track with a "movable track," so as to permit them to draw up and let down timber and lumber from their factory; but not in a manner to obstruct the proper use of the road by the railway company; the other was the right to load and unload cars on the track, but not so as to conflict with the operation of Ryman's boats and elevators. The owners of the lot, when using the cars on the Ryman track for industries located on said lot, paid, as did all other persons, $1 per car for any car of lumber loaded and unloaded on the said track, and more [364] per car for all other kinds of merchandise. But the evidence shows that this was cheaper than hauling the merchandise in wagons to and from the landing.

The contention of the complainant is that these railroads are incumbrances, within the terms of the warranty, and that, as located, they diminish the value of the property at least $10,000. The defendant contends that the railroads are not incumbrances, within the meaning of the deed, and that, as a matter of fact, they do not diminish the value of the property at all.

There is much evidence on both sides of the question, but we are of the opinion that the weight of the evidence, shows that the railroads are not only not injurious to the lot but of great benefit. The lot is flat and low, lying on the bank of the river, and is useful only for factories. The evidence shows that without the roads this lot would be practically useless, and that these roads add to its value from twenty-five to fifty per cent. On the other hand, there is evidence to the effect that the roads, considering the way in which they are located or placed on the land, are an injury to it. But, as stated, the weight of the evidence decidedly sustains the conclusion that the roads are of great benefit to the land. It follows, therefore, that complainants are not entitled to any substantial damages.

It is insisted, however, that at all events the roads are technically incumbrances, and that complainants are entitled to recover their costs.

[365] There is a controversy in the authorities on this subject. In the New England States it is held that even a public road running across the land, in use, open and visible, is an incumbrance, falling within a covenant against incumbrances, and must be accounted for in damages. Kellogg v. Ingersoll, 2 Mass. 97; Hubbard v. Norton, 10 Conn. 422; Alling v. Burlock, 46 Conn. 504; Herrick v. Moore, 19 Me. 313; Lamb v. Danforth, 59 Me. 322, 8 Am. Rep. 426; Butler v. Galle, 27 Vt. 739; Prichard v. Atkinson, 3 N. H. 335; Hayes v. Stevens, 11 N. H. 28. The general reason assigned is that it deprives the owner of that dominion over the land to which he is entitled. A different view is taken in other States. Mummert v. McKeen, 112 Pa. St. 315, 4 Atl. 542, and cases cited; Howell v. Northampton R. Co. 211 Pa. St. 284, 60 Atl. 793; Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L.R.A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432; Hymes v. Estey, 116 N. Y. 501, 22 N. E. 1087, 15 Am. St. Rep. 421; Hymes v. Esty, 133 N. Y. 342, 31 N. E. 105; Jordan v. Eve, 31 Grat. (Va.) 1; Trice v. Kayton, 84 Va. 217, 4 S. E. 377, 10 Am. St. Rep. 836; Patton v. Quarrier, 18 W. Va. 477; Barre v. Fleming, 29 W. Va. 314, 1 S. E. 731; Desvergers v. Willis, 56 Ga. 516, 21 Am. Rep. 289; Haldane v. Sweet, 55 Mich. 196, 20 N. W. 902. The ground on which these cases rest is that when the road is a public one, actually open, and in use, the parties must be presumed to have taken it into account in fixing the price of the land, and therefore the covenant must be construed [366] as not intended to embrace the easement. The same rule is followed in some other States as to other open and visible easements. In Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85, it appears that the easement held not to be an incumbrance was the right to overflow the land with a millpond; the overflow being, of course, open and visible. The court said that this was equally as obvious as a public road, and that, in case of a public road, the doctrine did not rest on the fact that the road was in favor of the public, but that the easement was obvious and notorious in its character, and therefore the purchaser must be presumed to have been it, and to have fixed his price for the land with reference to the situation as thus presented. The same rule was followed in Bennett v. Booth, 70 W. Va. 264, 73 S. E. 909, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618; the easement complained of there being the right to overflow by a milldam (Ireton v. Thomas, 84 Kan. 70, 113 Pac. 306, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 737), a levee, covering several acres (Schruger v. Moorman, 20 Idaho 97, 117 Pac. 122, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 313, Ann. Cas. 1912D 1114), an irrigation ditch (Janes v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300), the right to the use of open windows looking across a lot which the vendor of the latter had retained, at which time the windows were obvious. Public roads are excluded in some other States, not on the ground that their existence is open and obvious, but because the court judicially knows that they are necessary, and hence useful. Harrison v. Des Moines, etc. R. Co. 91 Ia. 114, 58 N. W. 1081; [367] Killen v. Funk, 83 Neb. 622, 120 N. W. 189, 131 Am. St. Rep. 658; Sandum v. Johnson, 122 Minn. 368, 142 N. W. 878, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, Ann. Cas. 1914D 1007. The same reasoning was applied to the existence of a drainage ditch, in Stuhr v. Butterfield, 151 Ia. 736; 130 N. W. 807, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321; and to a public sewer five feet under ground in Iowa City First Unitarian Soc. v. Citizen's Sav. etc. Co. 162 Ia. 389, Ann. Cas. 1916B 575, 142 N. W. 87, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428. In the following cases it is held that the existence of a railroad right of way is an incumbrance, regardless of its open and obvious character. Pierce v. Houghton, 122 Ia. 477, 98 N. W. 306; Beach v. Miller, 51 Ill. 209, 2 Am. Rep. 290; Burk v. Hill, 48 Ind. 52, 17 Am. Rep. 831; Kellogg v. Malin, 60 Mo. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 426; Tuskegee Land, etc. Co. v. Birmingham Realty Co. 161 Ala. 542, 49 So. 378, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 992. The Missouri cases were followed to same effect in Farrington v. Tourtelott (C. C.) 39 Fed. 738, as substantially binding on the point, but which observations indicating that the doctrine did not wholly meet the approval of the court. Pilcher v. Atchison, etc. R. Co. 38 Kan. 516, 16 Pac. 945, 5 Am. St. Rep. 770, is cited in the brief before us, but there was no question of knowledge from the obvious existence of the railroad discussed. Pryor v. Buffalo, 197 N. Y. 123, 90 N. E. 423, is also cited, but the facts in that case were such as to render it inapplicable to the point we now have under examination. The covenant was of a very special character; and, while it appeared that the covenantee had knowledge of the [368] existence of the railway on the ground contracted for, it was that very ground that had to be furnished by the city, and hence compliance with the covenant necessarily involved the removal of that railway and the delivery of the land to the covenantee. Still we do not doubt that from the reasoning of the New York cases on the subject of public roads, the doctrine applicable to that class of improvements would not be extended to railroads. On the other hand, it is held in the following cases that existing railways in actual operation stand on the same ground as to their public and obvious character as do public highways: Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 60 Fla. 284, 53 So. 381, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 833, Ann. Cas. 1912C 647; Goodman v. Heilig, 157 N. C. 6, 72 S. E. 866, 86 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1004; Ex p. Alexander, 122 N. C. 727, 30 S. E. 336. The same doctrine was substantially laid down in Geren v. Caldarera, 99 Ark. 260, 138 S. W. 335, but the case is put not only on the ground that the purchaser knew that the switch track was on the land, but also that it was shown that the track in question was a direct inducement to his purchase.

We have held that where an intending purchaser inspected the land which he proposed to buy, and saw upon it in operation a line of railway, he could not thereafter complain that the land was so incumbered, and recover therefor under his covenant against incumbrances. Rich v. Scales, 116 Tenn. 57, 66, 99, 91 S. W. 50, 52. In that case the court said:

[369] "But if a part of the land purporting to be conveyed by the deed be held in adverse possession at the time of the conveyance, and the vendee have knowledge of such adverse possession at the time he takes his conveyance, he can have no relief, either upon his covenants at law or in any form in equity; otherwise, if he have no knowledge of such adverse possession at the time." 116, 66, 91 S. W. 50.

Again:

"Treating the case really presented in the bill, an action on the covenants of the deed, upon the ground that a part of the land embraced within the calls was at the time of the conveyance held by an outstanding and better title, that of the railway company, two insuperable objections are apparent: Firstly, as already said, the representation by bounds would control that made by the calls for distance, and it follows that none of the land described was held by better title, and that the complainant obtained all that he had contracted for; secondly, assuming that the strip claimed in the bill really fell within all the descriptive words of the deed, still the complainant could not recover, because the strip was, when the conveyance was taken, then in the adverse possession of the railroad company in a manner open and obvious to the complainant, and under such circumstances he could assert no right either at law or in equity in respect thereof based upon the deed in question." 116 Tenn. 69, 91 S. W. 52.

[370] The reason is substantially the same as that which applies to the existence of public highways. Perry v. Williamson (Tenn.) 47 S. W. 189.

In the case last cited it was held that the rule would not apply to the existence of a private way, when it did not appear that the purchaser had knowledge of the legal existence of such way.

Similarly, in the case now before us, it is insisted that although complainant inspected the premises before he made his purchase, and had an abstract of title, he was misled by defendant into believing that one of the railroads was paying rent for the use of the right of way. The evidence sustains this contention as to the Ryman track. That is to say, the owners of the Ryman track were paying rent for the right to use a certain part of the lot adjoining the track for loading and unloading, the sum of $8.33 per month. This was so stated to complainant as reasonably to lead him to believe that the rent was being paid for the use of the track, and hence that the track was subject to the control and disposal of the owner of the lot; and it seems that he did believe this, and actually demanded rent for it from the Ryman people a few months after his purchase, and after the time had expired for which the Ryman people had rented the space adjoining the track. The latter informed him of his mistake, referred him to the contract under which they had obtained the right of way, and refused longer to rent the space of ground they had previously used for the loading and unloading. Under these circumstances, [371] we are of the opinion that the inference to be drawn from the open and obvious character of the Ryman track is rebutted, and that this track must be treated as an incumbrance; and although complainant is entitled to no substantial damages therefor, since the evidence shows that it was beneficial to the land, still he is entitled to nominal damages, and to the costs of the cause. Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46.

A decree will therefore be entered so modifying the decree of chancellor as to adjudge that, although complainant is not entitled to any substantial damages, he is entitled to nominal damages, and to the costs of the cause.

NOTE.

In the reported case an existing railroad right of way over granted premises which was in use at the time of the sale is held to be a breach of a covenant of warranty and against incumbrances, it appearing that the grantee was misled into believing that the railroad company paid a rental for the right of way. The earlier cases discussing the existence of a right of way as a breach of a covenant of warranty in a deed are reviewed in the note to Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. Ann. Cas. 1912C 647. As to other easements as breaches of a covenant of warranty or against incumbrances see the notes to Schurger v. Moorman, Ann. Cas. 1912D 1114 (right of way for water ditch); Newmyer v. Roush, Ann. Cas. 1913D 433 (private roadway); Sandum v. Johnson, Ann. Cas. 1914D 1007 (public highway); Iowa City First Unitarian Soc. v. Citizens Sav. etc. Co. Ann. Cas. 1916B 575 (public sewer).

COLORED INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL OF CINCINNATI

v.

BATES ET AL.

Ohio Supreme Court—June 23, 1914.

90 Ohio St. 288; 107 N. E. 770.

Wills — Election by Husband to Take Under Wife's Will — Acts Constituting Election.

In order that acts or a course of conduct of the surviving consort of a deceased testator should operate to equitably estop such consort from claiming dower and a distributive share of the personal property under the law and to amount to an election to take under the will, such acts must be of such an unequivocal character as will clearly and distinctly demonstrate a purpose to accept the provisions of the will.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Court of Appeals, Hamilton county.

Action between Colored Industrial School of Cincinnati and Bates, administrator, et al. To review judgment rendered, Industrial School brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Worthington & Strong, Willis M. Kemper and Robert S. Fulton for plaintiff in error.

Healy, Ferris & McAvoy and William C. Cochran for defendants in error.

[238] NICHOLS, C. J.—Sallie J. McCall, a resident of Hamilton county, Ohio, died March 6, 1909, leaving a last will and testament. She left surviving her husband, William A. McCall, and the important question in this case is whether or not William A. McCall elected to take under her will.

The items of the will of testatrix pertinent to this question may be briefly stated as follows:

By item 1 the testatrix devised certain real [289] estate known as the "Andover Building" in Cincinnati to certain trustees in trust for the benefit of the Colored Industrial School of Cincinnati, said trustees to incorporate said school and convey said real estate to it.

By item 2 she devised certain real estate on the north side of Fourth street in Cincinnati to her husband, William A. McCall, during his natural life, with remainder after his death to the said trustees in trust for the Colored Industrial School of Cincinnati, in the same manner as the property devised to said school by item 1.

By item 4 she devised certain real estate on Clinton street in Cincinnati in fee simple to the Ohio State Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and Animals.

By item 8 she devised certain real estate on Main avenue, Avondale, Cincinnati (being the homestead of herself and husband), to her husband, William A. McCall, in fee. She also bequeathed to him all the furniture and household belongings in said house, except such as were otherwise specifically devised.

By item 13 of said will she provided that after the payment and discharge of all bequests made in the will, all bonds and the remainder of all stocks owned by her at the time of her death were bequeathed to the said trustees in trust for the Colored Industrial School of Cincinnati, in the same manner as the property bequeathed in item 1.

By item 14 she appointed her husband, William A. McCall, executor of her will.

On the date of the probate of the will, March 25, [290] 1909, William A. McCall was duly appointed and qualified as executor.

On September 5, 1909, six months after the death of his first wife, William A. McCall was married to Mary A. Andrews, and on September 9, 1909, he died leaving the said Mary A. Andrews McCall, his widow, surviving him.

No citation was ever issued by the probate court to the husband to appear and make his election as provided by Section 5963, Revised Statutes (Section 10566, General Code), and no election was ever made by him in the probate court. He had not settled the estate of his deceased wife or filed an account as executor, at the time of his death. No children were born to either Sallie J. McCall or William A. McCall.

The estate of Sallie J. McCall consisted of the four pieces of real estate in Cincinnati specifically devised by the items of the will to which we have above referred, and a personal estate of the appraised value of $250,325.49; of this personal estate $245,584.25 was in stocks and bonds and the balance was in household furniture, money and overdue coupons. The debts of the estate were comparatively small in amount.

After the death of William A. McCall, an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed was appointed of the estate of Sallie J. McCall, and an administrator of the estate of William A. McCall.

The claim is made that William A. McCall having died without electing to take under the will of his wife, his estate is entitled to its statutory share of her estate. On the other hand it is claimed that, [291] though William A. McCall made no formal election to take under said will, yet by his acts he did, as a matter of fact, elect to take under the will of Sallie J. McCall, and his estate is entitled only to the property given to him by said will.

The acts of William A. McCall which are relied upon to establish an election upon his part are the following:

(a) William A. McCall, at the time of his wife's death and the probate of her will, was a retired business man, seventy-eight years of age, in good health and full possession of all his mental faculties. Immediately after the death of his wife he employed counsel, proceeded with the administration of the estate, caused an inventory to be made and was advised by counsel as to his rights under the will and under the law.

(b) Early in April Mr. McCall gave the agent appointed by the trustees of the Colored Industrial School all necessary information concerning the tenants in and rentals of the Andover building, and also went with the rent collector of said agent to the Andover building, introduced said collector to all the tenants in said building and instructed said tenants thereafter to pay their rent to said collector. From that time on all the rents from said building were paid to and collected by said agent without any objection whatever on the part of Mr. McCall. Mr. McCall also turned over to the agent of the said trustees the insurance policies on said building.

(c) Beginning with the rent due in April and from that time on until the date of his death Mr. McCall collected the rent from the Fourth street [292] property and deposited it in his individual account in bank, and not in the account kept by him as executor, though he gave receipts signed by himself as executor. This Fourth street property is the property, mentioned in item 2 of the will of Sallie J. McCall, which was devised to the said William A. McCall for and during his natural life, and after his death to the trustees for the said Colored Industrial School in fee. The policies of insurance on this Fourth street property were indorsed by the agent of the insurance companies to the effect that Mrs. McCall had a "life interest" in the property. This indorsement was made at Mr. McCall's request. The same indorsement is made on the policies of insurance on the Avondale property, which had been devised to Mr. McCall in fee.

(d) Mr. McCall took possession of all the personal property in the Avondale house, including property specifically bequeathed to the Cincinnati Art Museum, the gift to become effective after the death of Mr. McCall. Mr. McCall during his life gave away some clothing which had belonged to his wife.

(e) Mr. McCall was elected as one of the trustees for the Colored Industrial School and attended one meeting.

(f) He executed a quitclaim deed to the purchaser of the Clinton street property, when the purchaser declined to take the property from the devise, the Ohio State Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and Animals, unless Mr. McCall made his election to take under the will or execute a quitclaim deed.

[293] (g) Mr. McCall paid the taxes on the Andover building, Fourth street property and the Clinton street property out of the funds of the estate of Sallie J. McCall and credited himself as executor with such payments. The taxes on the Avondale property he paid out of his individual account.

(h) Mr. McCall had full knowledge of the extent of the estate of Sallie J. McCall and of his rights under the will at the time of the acts above relied upon.

Under the circumstances of this case, are any of the above acts, or all of them taken together, sufficient to constitute an election in fact on the part of William A. McCall to take under the will of Sallie J. McCall?

The statutes governing the matter of election under a will as they stood at the date of the death of Sallie J. McCall were Sections 5963 and 5964, Revised Statutes, which have been carried into the General Code as Section 10566 et seq. These sections as they appeared in the Revised Statutes are as follows:

"Sec. 5963. If any provision be made for a widow or widower in the will of the deceased consort, the probate court shall, forthwith, after the probate of such will, issue a citation to such widow or widower to appear and elect whether to take such provision or to be endowed of the lands of the deceased consort and take the distributive share of the personal estate; and such election shall be made within one year from the date of the service of the citation aforesaid; provided, that such widow or widower may, at any time before the period of such [294] election has expired, file her petition in the court of common pleas for the proper county, making all persons interested in said will defendants to such petition, asking a construction of the provisions of said will in her or his favor, and to have the advice of said court, or of the proper appellate court on appeal thereon; and if proceedings for such advice, or proceedings to contest the validity of such will be commenced within such year, the widower or widower shall be entitled to make election within three months after such proceedings shall have been finally disposed of, and said will shall not have been set aside; but the widow or widower shall not be entitled to both dower and the provisions of the will in her or his favor, unless it plainly appears by the will to have been the intention that the widow or widower should have such provision in addition to the dower and such distributive share."

"Sec. 5964. The election of the widow or widower to take under the will shall be made in person, in the probate court of the proper county, except as hereinafter provided; and on the application by a widow or widower to take under the will, it shall be the duty of the court to explain the provisions of the will, the rights under it, and by law in the event of a refusal to take under the will. The election of the widow or widower to take under the will shall be entered upon the minutes of the court; and if the widow or widower shall fail to make such election, the widow or widower shall retain the dower, and such share of the personal estate of the deceased consort as the widow or widower would be entitled to by law in case the deceased consort [295] had died intestate, leaving children. If the widow or widower elect to take under the will, the widow or widower shall be barred of dower and such share, and take under the will alone, unless as provided in the next preceding section; but such election by the widow or widower to take under the will shall not bar the right to remain in the mansion of the deceased consort, or the widow to receive one year's allowance for the support of herself and children, as provided by law, unless the will shall expressly otherwise direct."

These two sections are based upon sections 45 and 46 of the original act relating to wills; passed March 23, 1840 (38 O. L. 120). They have been often amended and before the court many times. As originally passed, the statute provided for an election within six months and made no provision for citation; and it was at one time held, at least by inference, that the only manner of making an election is that provided by statute: Stillely v. Folger, 14 Ohio 610.

But in so far as that case held that the only method of making an election is that provided by statute, it was overruled by the subsequent case of Thompson v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 480; and it has, at least since the decision of the last case, been settled in this state that an election to take under a will can be made by a widow or widower by acts which would estop her or him from denying such election. Baxter v. Bowyer, 19 Ohio St. 490; Stockton v. Wooley, 20 Ohio St. 184; Millikin v. Welliver, 37 Ohio St. 460; Posegate v. South, 46 Ohio St. 391, 21 N. E. 641; Mellinger v. Mellinger, 73 Ohio [296] St. 221, 76 N. E. 615. We know of no exceptions to this rule in any of the other states.

But while an election to take under the will may be made by acts of the party, it is settled that the act or acts relied upon as constituting an election by conduct must be plain and unequivocal, done with a full knowledge of rights under the will and under the law respectively and of the true condition of the estate and generally be of such long duration as clearly shows a purpose to take under the will. Reed v. Dickerman, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 146; Delay v. Vinal, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 57, 65; Thompson v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 480, 485; Stark v. Hunton, 1 N. J. Eq. 218, 227; Caston v. Caston, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 1; Craig v. Walthall, 14 Grat. (Va.) 518, 525; Clay v. Hart, 7 Dana (Ky.) 1, 6; Haynie v. Dickens, 68 Ill. 267; Cory v. Cory, 37 N. J. Eq. 198, 201; Rutherford v. Mayo, 76 Va. 117, 123; Exchange, etc. Bank v. Stone, 80 Ky. 109; Clark v. Middlesworth, 82 Ind. 240, 247; Willson v. Wilson, 145 Ind. 659, 44 N. E. 665; Cooper v. Cooper, 77 Va. 198, 205; Hovey v. Hovey, 61 N. H. 599; English v. English, 3 N. J. Eq. 504, 29 Am. Dec. 730; Shaw v. Shaw, 2 Dana (Ky.) 341; Forester v. Watford, 67 Ga. 508.

Our statute is different from that of many other states in that by express terms of the statute itself a failure to elect to take under the will within the time prescribed by law works a presumption that the party repudiates the provisions of the will and takes under the law.

The statute was primarily intended to protect the interests of the widow. Since 1869 Ann. Cas. 1916C.—78.

It has included, [297] of course, widowers as well as widows. It provides that the surviving consort must have an opportunity of making definite choice whether acceptance will be made of the provisions of the will or whether the rights accorded to the party by the law will be retained irrespective of the will. The law provides that the widow or widower shall have one year from the time of issuing of citation to elect, to make choice as to the alternative, and this time is granted so that opportunity may be given to ascertain all the facts in regard to the estate in arriving at a determination as to what may be to the best interest of the party electing. This is plain from the provisions of the act allowing the surviving consort to bring an action for the construction of the provisions of the will in his or her favor before exercising choice, and that when such action is brought the period for election is extended three months after final disposition of such proceedings for construction. There is no sentiment about the law. It presumes that the widow or widower in making election will be guided wholly by her or his interests; in fact, the law provides (Sections 10574 and 10575, General Code) that in the case of a widow or widower of unsound mind the court, if satisfied that the provision made by the will is more valuable than the provision made by law, shall elect for such incompetent widow or widower to take under the will, and of course, under the statute itself, the court can only make this election when it is satisfied that the provision made by the will is more valuable and better than the provision by law. The widow or widower can only take under the will [298] by electing so to do. If she or he does not elect, then she or he takes under the law. Therefore (as in the case at bar), when no citation has been issued and when the widower dies in less than a year after the probate of the will of his wife without having made a formal election, it must take some clear and convincing act to constitute an election upon his part to take under the will; some act that is clearly inconsistent with an intention not to take under the law. It is impossible to prescribe any absolute rule under which to designate what acts are sufficient to constitute an election. Each case must be determined by the circumstances peculiar to it.

The fact that William A. McCall died within the period allowed for his election, that he made no formal election and that no citation was issued, brings him clearly within the statute as taking under the law.

This, as we have pointed out before, can of course be controverted by clear proof that he in fact took under the will, but in the absence of such proof the law presumes that he elected to take under the law.

If there is any presumption in the case the presumption is that he took under the law, for the reason that the law contemplates the widow or widower will accept the most valuable provision, and from the extent of this estate, as shown by the inventory, we have no doubt that it was clearly to Mr. McCall's pecuniary advantage not to accept the provision made for him by the will.

Now, considering briefly the facts relied upon in this case, can any of them or all of them be considered as acts which show plainly and unequivocally [299] that Mr. McCall accepted the provision made for him by the will? We are of the opinion that they do not. The estate was very large. Mr. McCall was appointed as executor. He knew that he had a year in which to decide whether he would take under the will or under the law. As executor it was his duty to administer the estate and this he proceeded to do. The statute does not provide that he must exercise his choice immediately upon being advised as to his rights. On the contrary, it expressly provides that he shall have one year after he is cited by the probate court in which to make his election. The Andover building was given expressly to the trustees for the Colored Industrial School. These trustees were entitled to the rents from it from the date of the death of Sallie J. McCall. Mr. McCall had no interest whatever in these rents unless dower should be assigned. If he should decide to take under the law then he would have a claim for dower in said property. Neither did he have any right in the insurance policies upon this building. Whether he elected to take under the will or under the law, the property went to the trustees of the Colored Industrial School, the only difference being that in one event he would have a dower interest in the property and in the other event he would have no interest in it. Therefore, what he did in connection with this property does not amount to an acceptance by him of the provision made for him by the will.

His acts in connection with the Fourth street property we regard as the strongest upon which to base the contention that he elected to take under [300] the will. If he took under the will he was entitled to rentals from this building for his life. On the other hand, if he took under the law he would have no right to these rents—he would only have a dower interest in the property. Therefore, the fact that he collected the rents and placed them in his own individual account was consistent with his taking under the will and, disconnected with the other circumstances as to his situation and rights, inconsistent with his taking under the law. But we cannot overlook the fact that Mr. McCall was acting as executor of his wife's estate; that until he made his election there was no one else to collect these rents and it was therefore proper for him to do so; that said collections were made during a period allowed him by law within which to come to a decision as to his election; that while he placed the money so collected in his own individual account, the record shows that at all times he had in his account a sum greater than the total amount of rents collected, and, therefore, had he elected to take under the law such amount would have been regarded as held by him in trust for the persons entitled to the same; and the fact that he had it in his possession at all times made it at all times possible for him to make known his election to take under the law and that he held said money for the person or persons entitled to it.

In other words, while his collecting and depositing of these rents to his own individual account was consistent with his taking under the will, it was not inconsistent with his taking under the law if he elected so to do at any time while he lived. No [301] rents were lost by his conduct as to this property, and so long as he did not appropriate and actually use the property it cannot be said that his acts constituted a clear and unequivocal election to take the provision made for him by the will.

We do not regard the indorsements on the insurance policies as material. These indorsements were made by the agent at Mr. McCall's request. Neither Mr. McCall nor the agent seemed to be very clear as to the interest which Mr. McCall had in the properties.

As to the Avondale property, that was the homestead of Mr. McCall and he simply continued to reside there after his wife's death. He had a right to reside there for one year whether he took under the will or took under the law, and, as stated above, he knew that he had at least one year in which to make up his mind whether he would take under the will or under the law, and his conduct with reference to this property shows nothing one way or the other.

We do not think, either, that the fact that he was elected one of the trustees of the Colored Industrial School and attended one meeting throws any light upon the controversy. So far as the record shows he had nothing to do with his election nor did he take any active part in the proceedings of the trustees. There would possibly be nothing inconsistent in his taking under the law and also acting as one of the trustees for said school.

As to the execution of the quitclaim deed for the Clinton street property, this act could probably be construed either way; more logically perhaps as [302] showing an intention to take under the law. If he had intended to take under the will then undoubtedly he would have complied with the request of the purchaser and filed his election and avoided the necessity of making a quitclaim deed. As he did not do this but made a quitclaim deed, it is presumed that he had some interest in the property, or supposed he would or might have, and thus released it. The only real significance of this act, as we view it, is that it shows that at the time Mr. McCall made this quitclaim deed he was undecided whether he would take under the will or under the law.

The above brief review of the acts relied upon gives our view of their significance as we understand said acts from the evidence disclosed by the record.

We have examined carefully all of the cases referred to in the briefs and many others, and it is clear that to establish by acts an election to take under the will, where the widow or widower dies within the period allowed by law to make such election, such acts must be plain, unequivocal, done with a full knowledge of all the circumstances, of the rights under the will, of the extent of the estate, and must be such as would estop the widow or widower from denying, within such period, that she or he had so elected, had she or he lived and applied during such period to take under the law.

Practically all of the cases where an election to take under the law is involved are cases where the acts not only were plain and unequivocal but were also of long duration. After careful examination of all the cases referred to in the briefs as well as [303] other cases cited by the text-writers, we are more than ever impressed with the language of Johnson, J., in the case of Milliken v. Welliver, 37 Ohio St. 480, 487, that "It is believed no case can be found where the facts are held sufficient to amount to an election to waive the widow's rights under the law, unless they are of such a marked character and of such long duration as will clearly and distinctly evince a purpose to take the provisions of the will, and to operate as an effectual equitable bar to dower."

We do not think it necessary to comment further upon the authorities cited. All of them are in accord with and none of them is contrary to the view that during the period given by the statute within which to make an election to accept the provision made by the will, unless the widow or widower makes a formal election, as provided by the statute, no act can be construed as such an election unless it be an act which would estop a widow or widower should she or he make application for an assignment of dower and distributive share of the personal property during such period.

The court of appeals found all of the bequests made in the will and the codicils of Sallie J. McCall, except the bequest to the trustees for the Colored Industrial School, were specific bequests and should be paid out of the estate before the bonds owned by her and the remainder of the stocks owned by her at her death should go to the trustees for the Colored Industrial School as provided in item 13 of said will, and that any deficiency in the share of William A. McCall, by reason of the delivery in [304] full to said specific legatees of their specific bequests, should be borne by the said trustees of the Colored Industrial School.

To this finding of the court of appeals special exception is made by counsel for the Colored Industrial School, and it is claimed that the legacy to the Colored Industrial School by item 13 of the will is also a specific legacy and is no more chargeable with the payment of claims and expenses than any other specific legacy.

It is also claimed that the legacy to the National American Woman Suffrage Association, given by item 10 of the will and item 7 of the first codicil, is a general and not a specific legacy.

Without making fine distinctions and comparing authorities as to what are and what are not specific legacies, it seems clear that it was the intention of the testatrix, gathered from the whole will and from the language used in item 13, that the bequest to the Colored Industrial School was only to be made after the payment and discharge of all the other bequests named in the will, and therefore the decision of the court of appeals in this respect is correct. Nor does it seem that there should be any question but that the devise to the National American Woman Suffrage Association was specific and was among the legacies to be paid before the bequest to the Colored Industrial School given by item 13 of the will.

The seventh item of the first codicil plainly substituted the stock of The Cincinnati Street Railway Company for the stock of The Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway Company bequeathed by item 10 [305] of the will to the National American Woman Suffrage Association, such last-named stock having been disposed of by the testatrix subsequent to the time of making the will and prior to the date of the execution of the first codicil.

Judgment affirmed.

Shauck, Johnson, Donahue, Wanamaker, Newman and Wilkin, JJ., concur.

NOTE.Sufficiency of Acts to Constitute Election by Husband to Take under Wife's Will.

In General, 1204.

Acts Sufficient, 1204.

Acts Insufficient:

Generally, 1205.

Acts as Tenant by Curtesy, 1205.

Acts as Executor, 1207.

Noncompliance with Statute, 1207.

In General.

As is observed in the reported case, it is impossible, in the absence of a statute to lay down any absolute rule for the determination of what acts are sufficient to constitute an election by a husband to take under his wife's will. Therefore each case depends on its own peculiar circumstances. In the case of In re Melot, 231 Pa. St. 520, 80 Atl. 1051, the court, in considering the question said: "The general rules for determining whether there has been an election by matter in pais have been many times set forth. Thus in Bradford v. Kent, 43 Pa. St. 474, Mr. Justice Strong said (p. 484): 'That an election may be evidenced by matter in pais as well as by matter of record is certain, and it was conceded in the court below. It is true, nothing less than unequivocal acts will prove an election, and they must be acts done with the knowledge of the party's rights, as well as of the circumstances of the case. Nothing less than an act of choice intelligently done will suffice.' A statement of the rule which is in line with our Pennsylvania decisions is found in 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed. 97) as follows: 'In order that an act may amount to an election, two things are essential: first, it must be clear that the person alleged to have elected was aware of the nature and extent of his rights; second, it must be shown that, having that knowledge, he intended to elect.'" And in Robertson v. Schard, 142 Ia. 500, 119 N. W. 529, it was said: "At the date when this will came into effect the statute did not make a written election filed in court the only method by which a surviving husband could express his choice in the matter, and any act or declaration of such survivor plainly indicating a purpose to take under the will was a sufficient election."

Acts Sufficient.

It is generally held that where a husband with full knowledge of his rights accepts a beneficial interest which is conferred on him by virtue of his wife's will, he thereby elects to take under the will instead of under the statute. Fry v. Morrison, 159 Ill. 244, 42 N. E. 774 (husband did not renounce will, but entered on enjoyment of property devised); Hawkins v. Bohling, 168 Ill. 214, 48 N. E. 94 (husband enjoyed benefits of will—his heirs could not elect to take against will); Richardson v. Trubey, 250 Ill. 577, 95 N. E. 971 (after being served with statutory notice to elect, husband refused to surrender certain property and filed in probate court sworn answer that he held it under will); Brightman v. Morgan, 111 Ia. 481, 82 N. E. 954 (husband filed election, received benefits under will, and consented to discharge of executrix and settlement of the estate); Smith v. Wells, 134 Mass. 11 (husband proved will, accepted position of executor, gave bond, and continued to occupy real estate left by his wife); In re Melot, 231 Pa. St. 520, 80 Atl. 1051 (see quotation, infra); Scholl's Appeal, (Pa.) 17 Atl. 206 (husband had written his wife's will, acted as administrator, c. t. a., and received benefits under will); Church v. Church, 80 Vt. 228, 67 Atl. 549. See also Coe's Appeal, 64 Conn. 352, 30 Atl. 140. In Fry v. Morrison, supra, where in it appeared that a woman devised the whole of her property to her husband and then by a codicil bequeathed an annuity to a third person, the court said: "By the terms of the will the property and estate of the testatrix were devised to the appellant subject to this annuity. At no time has he renounced under the will. It is a well settled rule in equity, that a person, by taking any beneficial interest under a will, is thereby held to confirm and ratify every other part of the will,—or, in other words, he shall not take any beneficial interest under a will and at the same time set up any right or claim of his own, even if otherwise legal and well founded, which shall defeat or in any way prevent the full effect and operation of any part of the will." The foregoing rule was applied in the case of In re Melot, 231 Pa. St. 520, 80 Atl. 1051, as follows: "In the present case it can hardly be doubted that appellant had full knowledge of the situation. He was an executor of the will and was active in the settlement of the estate. It also appears affirmatively from the testimony that he knew what his rights were, both under the will and without regard to it. One of the acts of appellant which the court below considered evidence of his intention to take under the will, was the fact that in his account as executor appellant claimed credit for cash paid for the funeral expenses of his wife. This was in accordance with a direction in the will, and it operated to transfer the primary liability for these expenses from the husband upon whom it would otherwise rest. This payment was inconsistent with an intention on the part of appellant to take against the will. If he had not intended to accept under the will, he could not consistently have repaid to himself the amount expended for funeral expenses. The fact that he did make such payment is therefore persuasive evidence of his acceptance under the will. Another matter which is very significant in this connection, as evidence in support of the same conclusion, is the fact that at the audit of the account appellant submitted a distribution statement, signed by himself, asking the court to distribute the estate in exact accordance with the terms of the will, including the award of his own legacy. This action would seem to indicate conclusively his acceptance under the will, and goes far to sustain the finding of the court below. An examination of the statement, which was in the form of a petition, shows that the prayer of appellant was that distribution should be made among all the parties mentioned in the will in the exact proportion as therein directed, and that the sum of one thousand dollars devised to him, should be distributed to himself. After this formal recognition of the will, made with full knowledge of the facts and circumstances of the estate, it is difficult to see where there is any room for appellant to assert that he did not elect to take under the will."

In each of the following cases it was held that the acts of the husband were sufficient to constitute an election to take under his wife's will: Rowley v. Sanns, 141 Ind. 179, 40 N. E. 674 (husband executed deed to part property devised to him under wife's will and recited in deed that grantor came into possession by virtue of will); Robertson v. Schard, 142 Ia. 500, 119 N. W. 529 (husband made no claim to statutory share and gave his written consent to approval of report of trustees under will); Weller v. Noffsinger, 57 Neb. 455, 77 N. W. 1025 (by written indorsement on will husband consented to its provisions and by his conduct renounced his statutory rights); Wise v. Rhodes, 84 Pa. St. 402 (husband had full knowledge of property that passed by will and allowed devisee to enter on property and for eight months to discharge duties imposed by will).

Acts Insufficient.

GENERALLY.

Consonant with the well recognized rule that one must have full knowledge of his rights in order to make a valid election, it has been held that a husband does not elect to take under his wife's will where without full knowledge of his rights he enjoys both the benefits of the will and the benefits of the statute. Huston v. Cone, 24 Ohio St. 11. And the fact that during the proceedings for probate of the will the husband filed a writing stating that he withdrew all objection to the proof of the will and consented to its allowance on condition that the executor should furnish a certain bond, has been held not to constitute an election by the husband to take under the will. McGrath v. Quinn, 218 Mass. 27, 105 N. E. 555, wherein the court said: "The allowance of a will propounded for probate with the consent of the surviving spouse, who has appeared as the sole contestant, and the right to waive its provisions for his or her benefit are distinct. Bunnell v. Hixon, 205 Mass. 468. If the petitioner had indorsed on the will his assent to its terms, he would not thereby have relinquished his right to take his distributive share as if his wife had died intestate. Bunnell v. Hixon, 205 Mass. 468. A waiver moreover is the intentional relinquishment of a known right. Metropolitan Coal Co. v. Boutell Transp. etc. Co. 185 Mass. 391, 397. And the question is one of fact. Taylor v. Cole, 111 Mass. 363. If we recur to the wording of the paper of withdrawal, the language previously quoted signifies, that all objections to proof of the will were withdrawn. It was on its face an arrangement for the termination of the contest over the petition for the probate of the will. But, if the conditional stipulation as to the bond raises any ambiguity, the intention of the parties may be shown by extrinsic evidence, and all doubt is removed by the testimony of counsel who acted for the executor, that the petitioner's counsel when the agreement was entered into stated to counsel then acting for the executor, that after the probate of the will the petitioner intended to exercise his statutory right of election."

ACTS AS TENANT BY CURTESY.

Where the acts of a husband in reference to his wife's property are performed by him under his statutory right, those acts do not constitute an election to take under his wife's will. Kerrigan v. Conelly (N. J.) 46 Atl. 227; In re Peck, 80 Vt. 469, 68 Atl. 433. See also In re Peck, 87 Vt. 194, 88 Atl. 568. In Kerrigan v. Connelly, supra, the court said: "If the rents were in fact received by the husband as administrator cum testamento annexo, and he was chargeable with them as received in that capacity, the decision in Sims v. Sims, 10 N. J. Eq. 158, 164, and the other cases referred to in the master's report, would seem to justify his conclusion. But the vital question in the case is, did the husband receive the rents and appropriate them as tenant by the curtesy or as an administrator? The difficulty, in my mind, is to see how it is to be held that the husband, who, as tenant by the curtesy, was entitled for life to the entire rents of this property (and the other real estate of his wife), free from charges for legacies, is, under any proof in this case, or under the circumstances of the case, to be considered as having waived his greater rights as tenant by the curtesy, or to have elected to receive the lesser estate in part of the lands in lieu of his curtesy in the entire land. . . . The devise, . . . by Catharine Kerrigan to her husband and their three children as tenants in common of a life interest in a portion of her real estate, subject to charges, had, so far as the husband was concerned, no effect or operation of itself to deprive him of his legal estate as sole tenant for life in all the real estate of which testatrix died seised, or of his right to receive the entire rents and profits for his life as tenant by the curtesy, free from any charges made by the will. . . . It is indispensable that facts clearly showing an election to take the lesser interest and waiver the larger must be shown. I am of opinion that it has not been shown that the husband did so elect in this case. The burden of showing this is upon the parties asserting the election. Worthington v. Wigonton, 20 Beav. (Eng.) 67, 74. The receipt of the entire rents, and their appropriation to his own use, without paying the legacies, was prima facie an assertion that he did not accept the devise. The only circumstance relied on or proved to show election by the husband to take the devise is his proof of the will on the failure of the executors named to prove it, and his acceptance of letters testamentary cum testamento annexo. But the will was operative as to the personal property of testatrix, which was given to persons other than the husband, and administration by some person was, therefore, necessary; and the husband's mere acceptance of the letters, with the trusts imposed on the administration, is not of itself sufficient to constitute a waiver of his estate by the curtesy, and was not itself an election to take this estate under the will. No benefit came to the husband by the acceptance of the estate under the will, but rather a loss, and therefore intention to elect between the estate given by the will and the curtesy is not to be inferred from this act alone. The case cited by the complainant's counsel—Schenck v. Schenck, 16 N. J. Eq. 174, 182—as to the effect of proving a will as conclusive evidence of the acceptance of a trust does not apply. That was a case where the testator was himself a trustee at the time of his death, and by the law the office of trustee devolved upon his executor. It was held, therefore, that, having become executor in fact, he could not deny that he had succeeded to the trust which the law imposed on him by force of his being executor. In the present case neither the original executors nor the administrator

c. t. a. other than the husband could, merely by proving the will, assert against the husband's consent the right to any rents and profits during his life for the purpose of paying the legacies; and, in order to establish such right against the husband, they would require in addition to their proof of the will some conveyance or waiver of his rights; and such waiver, conveyance, or election to take only the partial interest under the will was, in my judgment, equally necessary in order to destroy the husband's curtesy, even if he became administrator. It is not a case where the husband was wrongfully in possession of the rents at the time of proving the will, and where his subsequent receipts must, in equity, be considered as in performance of an obligation to dispose of them under the will. But it is a case where he was rightfully and legally entitled to receive the whole rents without abatement or charge for legacies, and as against the executors or any other administrator than himself the husband would clearly have been entitled to the entire rents and profits as tenant by the curtesy. He should not, therefore, as it seems to me, by the mere proof of the will, and in the absence of any subsequent acts releasing his rights, be chargeable, in favor of himself as administrator, c. t. a., with trusts from which he would have been freed had any other person administered."

Acts which in view of a subsequent express election to take against the will were held not to constitute an election to take under the wife's will were discussed as follows in the case of In re Peck, 80 Vt. 469, 68 Atl. 433: "An election may be by matter in pais, as well as by matter of record; but it can be only by plain and unequivocal acts, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, and of the party's rights; and such acts must be done with the intention of electing. . . . It is admitted by the demurrer that Edward W. had such knowledge. Hence the question narrows itself to the effect of his acts. The allegations show that immediately after the death of his wife he entered into the possession, control, and management of all the estate, and used and appropriated to his own use and benefit the entire income thereof to the time of his death; and they further show that during the same time he appropriated to his own use and used large portions of the principal, so that the rents, income, and principal thus appropriated and used exceeded twenty-five thousand dollars. How much of this aggregate sum was of the principal does not appear; but construing the allegation most strongly against the pleader, it must be the larger part. By the will he was given the possession, management, use, control, and income of all the estate during his natural life, but he was given no part of the principal.

He did not act in ignorance, since as admitted by the demurrer he was fully advised of his rights under the law, also under the will. In what way did he take large portion of the principal? Certainly not under the will. The only way in which he could take of the principal was by an election to take under the statute. There is to be considered in connection herewith the allegation that Edward W. for a large number of years before the testatrix's death had the exclusive control and management of all her property, handling it during all the same time as her trustee and her agent. This shows his relation to the property at the time of her death to have been such as in reason fairly to require him thereafter to continue in the control and management thereof, as far as necessary to its preservation and safety, until such time as he could relinquish the same to her personal representatives. Also the acts of Edward W., set forth in the petition and admitted, in making an application to the probate court within the specific time allowed by statute in which to make an election, asking for further time and stating therein, 'that said matter is now under consideration and that he cannot yet intelligently determine whether he ought to waive the provisions of the will, and in subsequently making the express waiver, against the will. Excluding the acts constituting the express election and the notice thereof, his acts alleged are in part evidence of an intention of election in favor of the will, and in part of an intention of election against it, the latter way of as much or more force as the former. They do not show an intention either way to the rejection of the other, without which there can be no election. It cannot be said therefore that the acts in question show plainly and unequivocally an election to take under the will."

ACTS AS EXECUTOR.

It has been held that acts performed by a husband as executor under his wife's will do not constitute an election on his part to allow the will to settle his own rights. Milner v. Davis, 120 Ia. 231, 94 N. W. 511. See also Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206, 85 N. E. 666. And see the reported case. In Milner v. Davis, supra, the court said: "The election relied upon is the contract with Preston to complete the sale already made by Mrs. Davis, and the subsequent compliance with that agreement. The rule is firmly established that an election must be of record, and that it is sufficient if it discloses an act or declaration plainly indicating an intention to take under the will. Craig v. Conover, 80 Ia. 358; In re Franke, 97 Ia. 704; In re Proctor, 103 Ia. 232. Before her death Mrs.

Davis had sold this land to Preston, and a part of the purchase price had been paid to her, and her sickness and death alone prevented the completion of the transaction. The defendant had agreed to this sale, and its purpose was, as stated by him, to secure a home in town. It was perfectly proper, then, for him to agree to complete it as soon as it could be done through legal channels, and we see nothing in the contract itself which even points towards an election on his part. He did nothing more than to agree to qualify as executor, and as such to procure the necessary order for a conveyance of the land according to the terms of the sale made by his wife. True, when he made the contract he had not been appointed by the court because the will had not then been probated, but the purchaser wanted immediate possession of the land, and the contract was so drawn that all interests would be fully protected in case of a failure on his part as executor to carry out its terms. Every act which he agreed to do was to be done as executor under the direction of the court, and every act which he did in closing the sale was so done."

NONCOMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

Under statutes requiring the acceptance of the will to be in writing, acts not fulfilling that requirement have been held not to constitute acceptance. Wolfe v. Mueller, 46 Colo. 335, 104 Pac. 487; Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206, 85 N. E. 666. See also Lahr v. Ulmer, 27 Ind. App. 107, 60 N. E. 1009: "Under the terms of the statute, each spouse has the option to take the property given by a will or one-half of the estate, and unless the written consent is given, he must be deemed to have elected to take the portion under the statute." Wolfe v. Mueller, supra. And in Tyler v. Wheeler, supra, the court enforced the statutory requirement of a written consent as follows: "The plaintiff contends that, by applying for an appointment and giving a bond as executor, the husband lost his right to the share which he should otherwise have received. The grounds of this contention are in substance two: first, that his signature to the petition for the appointment and to the bond was a written consent to the will; and, secondly, that his conduct in assuming the position of executor was an election that the will should be given full effect, and was a waiver of his rights under the statute, or an estoppel against his claim. First, did his action constitute a written consent to the will? Manifestly not the kind of written consent contemplated by the statute, for it is evidence that what is meant is a formal, express consent in writing. Conceding that consent may be given informally if it is in writing and its meaning is clear, we have to consider the nature of his action in accepting the trust of executor. In the first place, it is to be remembered that the will was legal and valid, except that it took effect only upon a part of the estate of the testatrix. It was the duty of the person appointed in it as executor to present it for probate, to take out letters testamentary, and to administer upon the estate. If some other person than the husband had been named in the will as executor, he would have presented a petition and signed a bond, as the husband did. In his petition he would have set forth truly that the testatrix left a will, and he would have signed a bond agreeing to administer the estate 'according to law and the will of the testator.' This would have meant a will which did not affect that portion of her estate which the law gave her husband. To administer according to law and the will of the testator, would have meant to turn over to the husband his share, and to dispose of the remainder under the will. There would have been no implication that it would deprive the husband of his share, or that it was a will which could have any more extended operation than that permitted to it under the law. We see no reason why the husband's act should have any different meaning in this respect than that of any other person who might have been appointed executor. He took no beneficial interest under the will. Mere probate of the will, whether on his petition or on that of another person, could not affect his legal rights. There was nothing inconsistent in his proving the will, and at the same time claiming his share of the property which was not affected by it. His performance of his official duty as executor was entirely apart from consent to the will for the purpose of giving it an effect which the law did not otherwise give it. It was a recognition of it as a valid instrument to the extent and for the purposes for which it was made valid by the statute, and not for another and different purpose. We are of opinion, therefore, that his signature in these official proceedings was not a written consent to the will within the meaning of Pub. Sts. c. 147, § 6. Much of what we have said is applicable to the plaintiff's contention that the defendant's intestate is estopped from claiming his share by reason of an election to treat the will as valid. The doctrine is well established, that one who elects to take a devise or legacy under a will is estopped from setting up a claim which would defeat the operation of the will. . . . But this rule has no application to a case where the claimant takes no interest, legal or equitable, under the will. In the present case, the testatrix left nothing by her will to her husband. The allowance which was made to him by the Probate Court for his services as executor was only a fair compensation. We are therefore of opinion, that no election was made which estopped the defendant's intestate from claiming his share of the estate, or which amounted to a waiver of his claim."

Likewise, where a statute provided that the consent to take under the will must be entered on the record of the court, and the statute was not complied with, it was held that there was no election to take under the will. Houston v. Lane; 62 La. 291, 17 N. W 514.

TEAT

v.

LAND.

IN RE TEAT.

Louisiana Supreme Court—June 29, 1914

135 La. 782; 66 So. 199.

Jury — Exclusion from Jury Service.

A summary order barring persons from serving as jurors, because they returned a verdict of acquittal, where it is thought by the public that there should have been a conviction, is void, no law authorizing it, even under the maxim, salus populi suprema lex: it not being necessary, or useful, for exclusion of unfit jurors from juror service, and the infliction of punishment not being permissible, unless denounced by the Legislature, and unless preceded by trial.

[See note at end of this case.]

Application by I. H. Teat for writs of mandamus and prohibition to John R. Land, Judge of First Judicial District Court in and for Parish of Caddo. The facts are stated in the opinion. MANDAMUS GRANTED.

Lowell C. Butler for applicant.

[783] PROVOSTY, J.—The respondent judge having made, and caused to be entered upon the minutes of his court, an order forever barring the relator from serving as a juror in the parish of Caddo, the relator unsuccessfully applied to him to rescind said order as being ultra vires and null, and now seeks, by the present proceeding, to have this court, under its supervisory power over inferior courts, direct the respondent to rescind said order. The court of the respondent is the First judicial district court of the state and the sole court having jurisdiction in the parish of Caddo, where the relator lives, of cases triable by jury.

The relator was one of the 12 jurors in the case of State v. Harvey S. Little and Anna Bond, His Wife. The verdict in this case was so different from what the public expected that a mass meeting was held at which the following resolutions were adopted:

"We confront a deplorable and intolerable situation that demands a remedy, and the remedy should be applied without delay and without favor. The facts are so stupendous, so bold, so astounding, that no right-thinking citizen can fail to see them and discern in them a significance that is appalling. These are the facts: High crime can be committed boldly in Caddo parish; human life can be taken, not in self-defense, nor in the hot passion of physical encounter, but with calmness and deliberation; a man can be shot down like a dog without a chance of defense or escape, and without warning of his peril. Justice is invoked; the court assumes its responsibility; the trial is held before a jury; the verdict of acquittal is promptly returned; the law-living community is shocked beyond expression.

"It is not one instance only, but there are many instances, where justice has been violated and her plea has been unheeded. It has been an accumulation, with one instance boldly crowning all.

"We are not dumb, nor do we feel helpless, nor can we afford to remain passive. Therefore be it

"Resolved by the citizens of Caddo parish, in [784] mass meeting assembled: It is the sense of this meeting, and it is hereby urged upon the court, that the names of the jurors, to wit, J. G. Heister, George Ray, W. E. Rosa, I. H. Teat, Robert Moss, Fred Whitmeyer, A. K. Lide, G. W. Thomas, O. C. Merret, L. M. Caraway, J. W. Kent, and R. H. Browning, who tried the case of the State v. Harvey S. Little and His Wife, Anna Bond Little, indicted for the murder of J. J. Van Cleve, be inscribed upon the records of the court, and they shall be forever barred as jurors in Caddo parish, for the reason that by their verdict of acquittal they have caused to be liberated the aforesaid Little and his wife, when the state had proved their guilt beyond a doubt. Such a verdict can be viewed in no other light than as a gross miscarriage of justice and of law, which, in its effect, is an encouragement to others who may be inclined to take human life on the flimsiest of pretexts, relying upon their plea of self-defense or the so-called unwritten law in justification of their murderous deeds."

This mass meeting is said to have numbered some 2,000, and to have been composed of the best elements of the city of Shreveport and parish of Caddo, and have been addressed by the leading citizens of that community, and we have no doubt, from the facts as stated by the respondent in his return, that its sense of outrage was fully justified; but we are constrained to hold that the remedy for the conditions thus complained of is not the one which our learned brother has adopted. We know of no law which authorizes such an order to be made. "Salus populi suprema lex" might be such a law, if such an order were necessary, or even useful, for the exclusion of unfit jurors from jury service; but it is not. It is not necessary, because our law has already made full and ample provision for the exclusion of unfit jurors; and it is not useful, because, if it stood as the sole authority for the exclusion of the relator as a juror, the relator could not be excluded. If the relator were excluded from some future trial, not because he was in fact an unfit person to serve on a jury, but because, whether he was fit or unfit, this order had legally disqualified him, the consequence would be that the verdict of the jury, from which the relator had thus been excluded, [785] would, for the reason of this exclusion of the relator, have to be set aside. Hence this order can serve no useful purpose, so far as concerns the exclusion of the relator from future jury service.

The only purpose it could possibly serve would be to punish relator, or to make of him an object lesson to future jurors; and it goes almost without saying that this cannot be done, in the absence of any law to authorize it. Under our law, punishment cannot be inflicted unless denounced by the Legislature and unless preceded by trial; and the law which invests all men with the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness stands in the way of any person being thus summarily and autocratically made use of for the purpose of furnishing an object lesson to future jurors.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that a writ of mandamus issue to the Honorable John R. Land, judge of the First judicial district court in and for the parish of Caddo, directing and ordering him to rescind and cancel the order made by him on March 17, 1914, barring the relator herein, I. H. Teat, as a juror for the parish of Caddo.

NOTE.

Power of Court to Exclude Person from Jury Service.

In the reported case it appears that, pursuant to a resolution of a mass meeting of citizens dissatisfied with the verdict in a criminal case, an order was made excluding the members of the jury who rendered that verdict from future jury service. That order the court holds to have been unauthorized, and on the petition of a member of the jury issues a writ of mandamus to compel its vacation. A very similar order was reviewed in People v. Murray, 85 Cal. 350, 24 Pac. 666. In that case it appeared that the prosecuting attorney moved to discharge from the jury list the members of a jury which had just returned a verdict. The trial judge, after criticizing the verdict, said: "This court has no further use for the twelve gentlemen that were sitting upon that panel. They will be discharged." The order being complained of by a person subsequently convicted at the same term, the court based its ruling on the ground that he was not prejudiced thereby, but commented on the order as follows: "It must be conceded that this was a novel proceeding. Ordinarily, a court would not be justified in discharging a jury because it had returned a verdict which did not meet with the approval of the court. But the verdict might be such as to convince the court that the jury had purposely and wilfully disregarded the evidence and returned a verdict in violation of their sworn duty. Under such circumstances the court would not only be justified in discharging the jurors, but it would be its duty to do so. The judge of the court below seems to have been of the opinion that the verdict returned in the case referred to was such as to justify the action taken, and in the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must presume in favor of the action of the court."

The reported case appears to be unique in respect to the fact that one of the excluded jurors made application for the vacation of the order of exclusion. The court refers to the order as a "punishment" by which the juror's "inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" are invaded. A somewhat different view of the nature of jury service was expressed in Garrett v. Weinberg, 54 S. C. 127, 31 S. E. 341, 34 S. R. 70, where in it was said: "Indeed, service on a jury is not a matter of right, but a matter of public duty, the performance of which is enforceable by proper penalties. It cannot be regarded as a privilege, but on the contrary is usually regarded as a burden. Hence we see no reason why the state may not, from time to time, make such alterations in the law prescribing the qualifications of a juror by legislation, either constitutional or statutory, as the case may require, as may be regarded most conducive to the public welfare. A citizen cannot claim any vested right in any statutory privilege or exemption, unless it rests upon some consideration importing into it an element of contract."

JOHNSON

v.

FLORIDA EAST COAST RAILWAY COMPANY.

Florida Supreme Court—December 2, 1913.

66 Fla. 415; 63 So. 713.

Pleading — Demurrer — Specification Sufficient.

A specification in a demurrer that a "plea presents no defense to the cause of action," may not be wholly insufficient where the plea is short and contains specific statements.

Scope and Effect of Demurrer.

A demurrer is addressed to a plea as an entirety, and questions its legal sufficiency as the statement of a defense.

Same.

If, considered as a whole, a plea does not in substance sufficiently present all of the essential elements of a valid defense to the declaration or to a designated count thereof, to which it is directed, a demurrer thereto should be sustained.

Carriers of Passengers — Safe Place for Delivery of Baggage.

A primary duty of a railroad common carrier imposed by law is to maintain a suitable and safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the carrier's line; and, in so far as it affects the safety of passengers in the delivery of their baggage, this duty cannot be delegated to another, whether it be a separate and independent corporation or a mere employee, so as to relieve the carrier of its legal liability for an injury to the passenger caused by the negligence of those engaged in delivering baggage to a passenger on the premises used by the carrier for that purpose.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Whatever may be the rule of liability where injury is caused by the negligence of the employees of an independent contractor in other instances and circumstances, it does not operate to relieve common carriers from their primary duty to maintain safe accommodations for their passengers in the delivery to them of their baggage at the point of destination; nor does the rule exempt such carriers from the legal consequences of the negligence of those engaged in the delivery of baggage to passengers, whether those employed in such delivery be the employees of the carrier or other independent corporations using and directing their own employees in the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the depot premises used by the carrier.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The duty of the carrier to maintain a suitable and safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the carrier's line is not changed when the carrier uses the premises, employees and facilities of another independent corporation as its agency for such delivery of baggage to passengers.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Whether the carrier owns or controls the premises or not, and whether the carrier exercises any authority or direction over the employees so engaged or not, the carrier is not relieved of the legal consequences of the negligence of the employees resulting in injury to a passenger of the carrier while properly engaged with the employees in receiving his baggage on the depot premises at his destination.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

In an action for injuries to a passenger alighting from a railroad company's train at his destination in the depot of an independent terminal company sustained by the falling of a trunk from a pile on the trunk platform, while the passenger was engaged in identifying his baggage for delivery, a plea that the terminal company "is a separate and independent corporation, engaged in receiving and delivering baggage to passengers" at the terminal depot over whose employees and over which corporation the defendant railroad company has no control, and is not engaged in any way in its management, and that the terminal company, its agents and servants are not the agents and servants of the defendant railroad company except for the purpose of storing and delivering baggage discharged from defendant's trains, does not state a defense to the action, since the duty of the defendant railroad company to provide a safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the defendant's line cannot be delegated to another.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Duval county: GIBBS, Judge.

Action for damages. Nils Johnson, plaintiff, and Florida East Coast Railroad Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff brings error. REVERSED.

[417] The declaration alleges:

"Nils Johnson, plaintiff, by Richard P. Daniels, Jr., and Lucien H. Boggs, his attorneys, sues Florida East Coast Railroad Company, a corporation, defendant, for this to wit:—

That on to wit: the first day of April, 1908, and at all times thereafter, the defendant was and is the owner of a certain line of railway, and a common carrier of passengers thereon for hire to wit: from St. Augustine [418] Florida, to Jacksonville, Florida, and in connection therewith makes use of a certain terminal station in said Jacksonville, Florida, to wit: the terminal station of the Jacksonville Terminal Company, for the discharge, care and reception of passengers alighting from said trains, and their luggage; that on or about the first day of April, 1908, the plaintiff took passage upon the defendant's said line of railway, and the defendant accepted the plaintiff as its passenger, for certain reward to it in that behalf paid, to be conveyed from said St. Augustine to said Jacksonville and the plaintiff likewise then and there delivered to the defendant, and the defendant then and there received of the plaintiff, certain baggage of the plaintiff, to be likewise conveyed by the defendant from said St. Augustine to said Jacksonville; that after plaintiff's arrival in said Jacksonville, to wit, on the third day of April, 1908, the plaintiff at the invitation of the said Jacksonville Terminal Company, its agents or servants which was then and there the agent of said defendant for the purpose of the care, accommodation and reception of passengers and their baggage discharged from defendant's trains, entered upon the baggage premises, to wit: the baggage platform of said Jacksonville Terminal Company for the purpose of identifying his said baggage, and while so upon said baggage platform, one of a certain pile of trunks, carelessly, negligently and insecurely piled or left piled upon said platform, violently fell upon the plaintiff and broke his right leg, and the plaintiff thereby became and was sick, sore, wounded and bruised, and suffered great anguish of mind and body, and was forced to expend large sums of money for necessary medical attendance, nursing and hospital treatment, notwithstanding which the plaintiff became and is permanently [419] disabled and lame, by reason of said injury to said limb. And plaintiff avers that said injury occurred to him by the negligence of the defendant, its agents, servants and employees in so inviting him to enter upon said baggage platform, which was then and there not a reasonably safe place, and in not maintaining said baggage platform in a reasonably safe condition.

Wherefore the plaintiff sues the defendant and claims Twenty Thousand Dollars damages."

Among other pleas the following was filed: "And for a fifth plea the defendant says that the Jacksonville Terminal Company is a separate and independent corporation, engaged in receiving and delivering baggage to passengers going to and from Jacksonville, over whose employees and over which corporation the defendant has no control, and is not engaged in any way in its management, and that the said Jacksonville Terminal Company, its agents and servants are not the agents and servants of the defendant, except for the purpose of storing and delivering baggage discharged from defendant's trains, and for no other purpose." A demurrer to this plea on the grounds that it presents no defense, that it is not responsive to the declaration, and that it admits the agency of the terminal company, was overruled: The plaintiff refused to join issue on this plea or to file a replication thereto. Final judgment for the defendant was rendered, and the plaintiff took writ of error.

Daniel & Boggs for plaintiff in error.

John E. Hartridge for defendant in error.

WHITFIELD, J. (after stating the facts).—The declaration alleges that the defendant railroad company "makes use of . . . the terminal station of the Jacksonville Terminal Company for the discharge, care and reception of passengers alighting from (defendant's) trains, and their baggage;" that the defendant transported [420] the plaintiff and his baggage from St. Augustine to Jacksonville, and that "after plaintiff's arrival in Jacksonville, . . . the plaintiff at the invitation of the . . . Jacksonville Terminal Company, its agents or servants which was then and there the agent of said defendant for the purpose of the care, accommodation and reception of passengers and their baggage discharged from defendant's trains, entered upon the baggage premises, to wit: the baggage platform of said Jacksonville Terminal Company for the purpose of identifying his said baggage, and while so upon said baggage platform; one of a certain pile of trunks, carelessly, negligently and insecurely piled or left piled upon said platform, violently fell upon the plaintiff injuring him; and plaintiff avers that said injury occurred to him by the negligence of the defendant, its agents, servant and employees in so inviting him to enter upon said baggage platform, which was then and there not a reasonably safe place, and in not maintaining said baggage platform in a reasonably safe condition."

Under these allegations the negligence relied on by the plaintiff is "the negligence of the defendant, its agents, servants and employees in inviting him to enter upon said baggage platform which was not . . . a reasonably safe place, and in not maintaining said baggage platform in a reasonably safe condition." It is alleged that the defendant railroad company "makes use of . . . the terminal station of the Jacksonville Terminal Company, for the discharge, care and reception of passengers alighting from its trains, and their baggage," and that the Jacksonville Terminal Company was the agent of the defendant railroad company "for the purpose of the care, accommodation and reception of [421] passengers and their baggage discharged from defendant's trains."

The plea in effect avers that the terminal company "is a separate and independent corporation, engaged in receiving and delivering baggage, . . . over whose employees and over which corporation the defendant has no control, and (the said defendant) is not engaged in any way in its management," and that the terminal company, its agents and servants are not the agents and servants of the defendant, except for the purpose of storing and delivering baggage discharged from defendant's trains.

It is contended for the defendant that the specifications of the demurrer to the plea viz: that it presents no defense to the action, that it is not responsive to the declaration, and that it admits the agency alleged, are not proper grounds of a demurrer, if they be appropriate in a motion to strike the plea: and that the sufficiency in law of the plea as a defense to the declaration was not raised by the grounds of the demurrer.

Even if it can be said that the last two grounds of the demurrer do not properly question the legal sufficiency of the plea as a defense to the declaration as it is framed, the first specification is that, the "plea presents no defense to the cause of action." This general ground of demurrer considered in the light of the specific statements of the rather brief pleadings, is not wholly insufficient to present the question of the legal sufficiency of the plea as a defense to the action.

A demurrer is addressed to a plea as an entirety, and questions its legal sufficiency as the statement of a defense. If, considered as a whole, a plea does not in substance sufficiently present all of the essential elements [422] of a valid defense to the declaration or to a designated count thereof, to which it is directed, the demurrer should be sustained.

Taken as a whole, the plea in substance avers that the terminal company is a separate and independent corporation engaged in receiving and delivering baggage to passengers, over whose employees the defendant has no control, and that as such separate and independent corporation the terminal company is the agent of the defendant only for the purpose of storing and delivering baggage discharged from defendant's trains. The question to be determined is whether the alleged negligence in inviting the plaintiff, a passenger alighting from the defendant's train, to the baggage platform of the terminal company and the alleged dangerous position of the trunks on the platform, can legally be attributed to the defendant railroad company.

A primary duty of a railroad common carrier imposed by law is to maintain a suitable and safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the carrier's line; and in so far as it affects the safety of passengers in the delivery of their baggage, this duty cannot be delegated to another, whether it be a separate and independent corporation or a mere employee, so as to relieve the carrier of its liability for an injury to the passenger caused by the negligence of those engaged in delivering baggage to a passenger on the premises used by the carrier for that purpose. See 2 Hutchinson on Carriers, Sec. 938. Whatever may be the rule of liability where injury is caused by the negligence of the employees of an independent contractor in other instances and circumstances, it does not operate to relieve common carriers from their primary duty to [423] maintain safe accommodations for their passengers in the delivery to them of their baggage at the point of destination; nor does the rule exempt such carriers from the legal consequences of the negligence of those engaged in the delivery of baggage to passengers, whether those employed in such delivery be the employees of the carriers or other independent corporations using and directing their own employees in the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the depot premises used by the carrier. The duty of the carrier to maintain a suitable and safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on the carrier's line, is not changed when the carrier uses the premises, employees and facilities of another independent corporation, as its agency for such delivery of baggage to passengers. Whether the carrier owns or controls the premises or not, and whether the carrier exercises any authority or direction over the employees so engaged or not, the carrier is not relieved of the legal consequences of the negligence of the employees resulting in injury to a passenger of the carrier while properly engaged with the employees in receiving his baggage on the depot premises at his destination. See Thompson on Neg. Secs. 665, 669, 2804, 3392 and authorities cited; Herrman v. Great Northern R. Co. 27 Wash. 472, 68 Pac. 82, 57 L.R.A. 390; Bennett v. Louisville, etc. R. Co. 102 U. S. 577, 26 U. S. (L. ed.) 235; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Griffin, 80 Fed. 278, 53 U. S. App. 22, 25 C. C. A. 413; Montgomery, etc. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep. 72; Penfield v. Cleveland, etc. R. Co. 29 App. Div. 413, 50 N. Y. S. 79; Floody v. Great Northern R. Co. 102 Minn. 81, 112 N. W. 875, 1081, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1196; Elliott on Railroads (2nd ed.) Sec. 1690; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. McCormick, 59 Fla. 121, 52 So. 712.

[424] The plea in effect avers "that the said Jacksonville Terminal Company, its agents and servants are . . . the agents and servants of the defendant, . . . for the purpose of storing and delivering baggage discharged from defendant's trains." The averment of the plea that the terminal company, "is a separate and independent corporation, engaged in receiving and delivering baggage to passengers going to and from Jacksonville, over whose employees and over which corporation the defendant has no control, and is not engaged in any way in its management," does not relieve the defendant common carrier of its legal liability for the negligence of the employees of its agents who are engaged in delivering baggage on the depot premises to passengers there alighting from defendant's train.

The averment of the quoted plea does not state the essential elements of a defense to the allegations of the declaration that "after plaintiff's arrival in Jacksonville . . . the plaintiff at the invitation of the said Jacksonville Terminal Company, its agents and servants which was then and there the agent of said defendant for the purpose of the care, accommodation and reception of passengers and their baggage discharged from defendant's trains, entered the baggage premises, to wit, the baggage platform of said Jacksonville Terminal Company for the purpose of identifying his said baggage, and while so upon the baggage platform, one of a certain pile of trunks, carelessly, negligently and insecurely piled or left piled upon said platform, violently fell upon the plaintiff" and injured him.

The terminal company and its employees while engaged on the depot premises in delivering baggage to a passenger alighting there from defendant's train, were performing [425] a primary duty imposed by law upon the carrier defendant to maintain a suitable and safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers at their destination on its line which duty cannot be delegated so as to avoid responsibility for its performance; and the defendant carrier is liable for the legal consequences of a negligent performance of that duty by the employees of the terminal company.

The judgment is reversed.

Shackleford, C. J., and Taylor, Cockrell and Hocker, J. J., concur.

NOTE.

Duty of Carrier to Provide Safe Place for Delivery of Baggage to Passenger.

In the few instances in which the question has arisen, it has been held that it is the duty of a railroad company to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place for the delivery of baggage to passengers. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Griffin, 80 Fed. 278, 53 U. S. App. 22, 25 C. C. A. 413; Bates v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 140 Wis. 235, 122 N. W. 745, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1069. And see the reported case.

In Bates v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. supra, the following facts appeared: The baggage room of the defendant was so constructed that a depression or pit extended from the double doors at the west side of the room eastward into the room about twenty-four feet and nearly across the room. This was about two feet nine inches in depth and slightly wider than the baggage truck, and it was used for running the baggage truck into the room so that the platform of the truck would be practically on a level with the floor of the room. This was an obvious convenience in loading baggage on the truck and transferring the loaded truck from the baggage room to the platform which was on the lower level. At both sides and at the end of this pit or depression the floor of the baggage room was available for and used for the deposit of baggage. The plaintiff was a passenger on the defendant's road, and went into the baggage room with the baggage master to identify her baggage and have the same checked. Near where she stood there was a truck in the pit or depression, and she accidentally stepped between the edge of the truck and the edge of the pit or depression, breaking her leg and sustaining injuries. She had not noticed nor had her attention been called to the pit, depression, or truck up to this time. The jury found, in a special verdict, that the plaintiff when injured was in the baggage room of the defendant at the invitation of the baggage master, and that this baggage room was not then reasonably safe for the use of passengers invited thereto to identify their baggage, and that this condition of the baggage room was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, and that there was no want of ordinary care on the plaintiff's part which contributed to the injury. The court said: "Upon this state of facts the defendant denies the right of the plaintiff to recover damages because the construction of the baggage room was 'an engineering problem,' and contends that its construction and maintenance was no breach of duty to any one; that it was a customary and usual mode of constructing baggage rooms and handling baggage and necessary to the easy and convenient operation of that branch of the carrying business; and that therefore the jury was not warranted in finding that the baggage room was not reasonably safe. . . . Generally speaking, and without reference to special statutes or exceptional rules, the law confers upon the master the right to construct and maintain his own property and appliances in his own way and according to his own judgment, and so long as there is no latent or hidden danger in such construction or maintenance the servant accepting employment from the master does so subject to this right of the master, and assumes the risk of injury from the open and obvious character of such appliances. Consequently in such cases, where the defect causing the injury presents a mere question of this kind, courts have sometimes designated it as a mere 'question of engineering,' meaning a question of judgment in the construction of the appliance. There is no legal rule or doctrine by force of which a court or jury is disabled from deciding a cause merely because in such decision there may be involved 'a question of engineering.' The expression relates to a condition of fact pertinent in cases between master and servant and not to a rule of law. The rule above stated obtaining between master and servant and relied upon by appellant has no application between carrier and passenger, which was the relation of the parties in the instant case. As to the respondent it was the duty of appellant to have its baggage room reasonably safe. . . . Whether or not the appellant performed this duty may be a question of law or a question of fact, and the inquiry in the instant case is whether there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury on this point. . . . Whether the baggage room constructed as described was reasonably safe for the use of passengers claiming or identifying baggage therein was in the case at bar, we think a question for the jury, notwithstanding the particular defect which rendered it unsafe, inhered in a plan of the room deliberately adopted and used at La Grose and elsewhere by the appellant. Not that the jury may at its will condemn any plan or building as not reasonably safe, but facts and circumstances may be laid before them tending to show that the building is dangerous for the use to which it is put by the carrier, and it is for the court to say whether the evidence has any such tendency, and for the jury to pass upon its weight and sufficiency. No doubt, if the baggage room so constructed was only for the purpose of transferring baggage to and from outgoing and incoming trains with the truck described, there would be no evidence of its insufficiency for that purpose, but when it is also used as a place for passengers to enter and walk about in for the purpose of identifying baggage at all hours and under all conceivable conditions of congestion of baggage, it may well be found to have been so constructed as to be dangerous to those passengers so using it. The finding of the jury covers both construction and maintenance, and the maintenance of this unguarded opening in a baggage room used for such purposes might well, upon the evidence before the jury, be found to constitute a failure to maintain the baggage room in a reasonably safe condition. It is not necessary to this to say that a barrier or railing around the pit or opening would destroy or impair its efficiency for the purpose of loading or unloading and removing baggage. For such purposes the baggage room was reasonably safe. It is only when the additional use by passengers for the purpose of identification is added that the room can be said not to have been reasonably safe for such additional use. Criticisms upon the instructions to the jury because such instructions permit the jury to consider whether or not the appellant was negligent in constructing and maintaining the pit in question are disposed of by these considerations."

In Illinois Cent R. Co. v. Griffin, 80 Fed. 278, 53 U. S. App. 22, 25 C. C. A. 413, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff entered the baggage room in order to point out the baggage wanted, at the invitation and for the benefit of the railroad company, and was injured by the falling of a defective door which she attempted to open, the court said: "The primary question, upon which all other questions of importance in this case turn, is whether the railroad company was under any duty to the defendant in error to make the baggage room a safe place. The contention of the plaintiff in error is that while railway waiting rooms, platforms, and the approaches thereto, are places to which the public having business with the railroad company are invited, a baggage room is necessarily a private place, where the one who goes without invitation, express or implied, is a trespasser, or at best a mere licensee, to whom no duty is owing, and that in this case, there being no pretense of an express invitation to the plaintiff to enter the room, there was no implied invitation, because she entered solely for her own convenience; the proper place for receiving her baggage being at the door or on the platform outside, and her presence inside being in no sense to the advantage of the company. We do not agree that a baggage room at a railway station, when open for the reception and delivery of baggage, is a private room, as against owners of baggage who are permitted to enter. In its relation to the public, the company is represented by the baggage master or other employee whom it puts in charge of the room; and, if an owner of baggage enters upon the invitation or by permission of the baggage master, it is the invitation or permission of the company; and whether, in a given instance, one who goes in by permission does it only for his own benefit, or for the advantage of both parties, must ordinarily be a question for the jury. If thereby the baggage master is aided in the performance of his duties or labors, the company which he represents is benefited. In this case the baggage master was told before he opened the door that a part of three pieces of baggage was wanted, and it was certainly to his convenience that the part or piece desired should be pointed out without his being required to bring the three pieces to the door or platform; and when he passed in, leaving the door open and giving no admonition to Miss Griffin to stay out, it was, to say the very least, a question for the jury whether she was not invited to go in. . . . The evidence in that respect being sufficient to support the verdict, it must be assumed, for the present purpose, that the entrance of the defendant in error into the baggage room was at the invitation and for the benefit of the railroad company, as well as for her own convenience; and, that conceded, the evidence which tended to establish negligence on the part of the defendant, and freedom from fault on the part of the plaintiff, was such as to forbid the withdrawal of the case from the jury."

In the reported case, it appears that the station at which the plaintiff was injured was the property of a terminal company, an independent corporation, engaged in receiving and delivering their baggage to passengers, over whose employees the defendant had no control, and that as such a separate and independent corporation the terminal company was the agent of the defendant only for the purpose of storing and delivering the baggage discharged from the defendant's trains, and that the station was also used by the defendant for the discharge, care and reception of its passengers. It also appears that the plaintiff was injured while he was on the baggage platform of the station at the invitation of the terminal company. In holding the defendant liable for the plaintiff's injuries, the court declares that it is the duty of a railroad carrier to provide a suitable and safe place for the delivery of their baggage to its passengers and that this duty is not changed, though the carrier uses the premises, employees or facilities of another independent corporation, as its agents. It is further held that in so far as the safety of the passengers in the delivery of their baggage is concerned, this duty to provide a reasonably safe place cannot be delegated and the railroad company thereby relieved of its liability for an injury to a passenger caused by the negligence of those engaged in delivering baggage to a passenger on premises used by the carrier for that purpose. Nor does the fact that the carrier uses the premises of another or that it does or does not exercise any control or authority over the employees so engaged, relieve it of its liability.

In Pineus v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 140 N. C. 450, 53 S. E. 297, 111 Am. St. Rep. 856, the evidence showed that on the plaintiff's arrival at a certain station, his trunks were placed with checks on them in the defendant's warehouse by the direction of the defendant's agent. The warehouse was on the defendant's right-of-way and was used by the defendant for freight purposes, and passengers' baggage was stored and handled in the warehouse. The plaintiff's baggage had been previously stored there and he had gotten on and off the train there. Shortly before the arrival of the next train the defendant's agent sent his clerk with the plaintiff to this warehouse for the purpose of rechecking the trunks. After rechecking the trunks the plaintiff started to take the approaching train. It was at night. There was no light on the platform and it was encumbered with cotton. The plaintiff stepped into a hole in the platform and was injured. The court said: "If these facts are true plaintiff was a passenger when injured. He had a right to seek his baggage and recheck it. It matters not whether Sharpsburg was a regular or a flag station, the defendant owed plaintiff the duty to provide a safe platform, especially as plaintiff entered on it at invitation of defendant's agent for a legitimate purpose. . . . The duty of a railroad company in respect to keeping safe station premises extends to all who rightfully come upon the premises in pursuance of the invitation which it holds out to the public, and embraces all who come there on legitimate business to be transacted with its agent."

MALAKIA

v.

RHODE ISLAND COMPANY.

Rhode Island Supreme Court—January 28, 1914.

36 R. I. 149; 89 Atl. 337.

Carriers of Passengers — Contributory Negligence — Extending Arm Outside Car.

Plaintiff, while riding on an interurban car, to flick the ashes from his cigar thrust his hand over the guard rail a sufficient distance beyond the side line of the car to bring it in contact with the trunk of a tree standing beside the track; the force of the blow breaking his wrist. Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[See note at end of this case.]

Exceptions from Superior Court, Kent county: STEARNS, Judge.

Action for damages. Joseph Malakia, plaintiff, and Rhode Island Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff alleges exceptions. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Alberio A. Arohambault and Raoul Archambault for plaintiff.

Joseph C. Sweeney and Alonzo R. Williams for defendant.

[150] VINCENT, J.—This is an action of trespass on the case for negligence and was tried to a jury in the Superior Court, in Kent County. At the conclusion of the testimony for the plaintiff, the presiding justice, on motion of the defendant, adjudged the plaintiff nonsuit to which the plaintiff duly excepted. Said exception is now before this court.

The plaintiff claims that the Superior Court erred in granting the defendant's motion for a nonsuit because (1), whether or not plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence as would bar him from recovery was a question for the jury; that (2), the plaintiff's case was sufficiently made out and the proof of the proximity of the tree to the tracks was sufficient to show negligence on the part of the defendant; and, therefore, the question as to the negligence of the defendant should have been left to the jury.

It appears from the evidence that on Sunday morning, July 21, 1912, the plaintiff boarded one of the defendant's cars, bound to Providence, at or in the vicinity of the village of Natick and seated himself upon the extreme left of the second seat from the rear end, being one of the smoking seats, so-called. The guard rail on the left hand side of the car was down. The plaintiff was smoking a cigar. When the car was turning from Reservoir Avenue into Elmwood Avenue, the plaintiff in flicking the ashes from his cigar extended or thrust his left hand over the guard rail and a sufficient distance beyond the side line of the car to bring the heel of the palm of the hand in contact with the trunk of a tree standing beside the track, the force of the blow breaking his wrist.

In his testimony at the trial the plaintiff admitted that he had been a passenger upon this line of the defendant's cars once or twice a week for a period of twelve years and that during that time he had known of the trees along the side of the track. The plaintiff also testified that when he extended his hand in flicking the ashes from his cigar he did not look to see where his hand was going.

[151] The evidence does not show definitely the distance to which the plaintiff must have extended his hand to bring the heel of the palm in contact with the tree. He estimates the distance at not more than six or seven inches but it is evident that six or seven inches would not carry it beyond the line of the car. Adding to the line of the car the measurement of the hand from the end of the fingers to the heel of the palm, which would be some five or six inches, it is evident that the plaintiff is mistaken as to the distance to which he extended his hand, a mistake which is not surprising as he confessedly was paying no attention to what he was doing. It is not, perhaps, under the circumstances of this case, important to determine the exact distance which the plaintiff extended his hand beyond the guard rail. That he extended it a considerable or substantial distance is clear from his own testimony and the testimony of other witnesses. The plaintiff admits that in extending his hand beyond the guard rail he did so with the full knowledge that there were trees in close proximity to the track and that he did not look or make any effort whatever to ascertain the safety of the movement which he was about to make. While the position of the guard rail would deter passengers from alighting from that side of the car it would also be a notice to them to keep their bodies and limbs within the same and not expose themselves beyond the line thereof.

The great weight of authority in this country seems to support the proposition that a passenger upon a car who rides with his arm or hand out of the window or otherwise allows his hand or arm to extend outwardly beyond the side line of the car is not in the exercise of due care, but is guilty of contributory negligence. Elliott on Railroads, Volume 4, Section 1633; Todd v. Old Colony, etc. Ry. 3 Allen (Mass.) 18; 80 Am. Dec. 49; Cummings v. Worcester, etc. Ry. 166 Mass. 220, 44 N. E. 126; Moore v. Edison Electric Ill. Co. 43 La. Ann. 792, 9 So. 433; Indianapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 29 Ind. 82, 92 Am. Dec. 336; Benedict v. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. 86 Minn. 224, 90 N. W. 360, 91 Am. St. Rep. 345, 57 L.R.A. 639; Clarke v. Louisville, etc. R. Co. 101 Ky. 34, 39 S. W. 840, 36 L.R.A. 123; Dun v. Seaboard, etc. R. Co. 78 Va. 645, 49 Am. Rep. 358.

[152] Many other cases, to the same effect, cited in the opinions are not included in the above.

The plaintiff has cited numerous authorities in support of his contention that the trial court erred in granting the nonsuit and that the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence should have been left to the jury. All of these cases have been carefully examined and we think that they are readily distinguishable from the case at bar. In some of them the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence rested upon disputed facts while in others the questions raised by the facts were those upon which reasonable minds might differ. In the case at bar, as we have already seen, there are no material disputed facts, and reasonable minds could hardly differ as to the plaintiff's contributory negligence when he admits that the guard rail was down, that he knew of the proximity of the trees, and that he did not even take the precaution to look before thrusting his hand out beyond the line of the car. Without attempting to distinguish each and all of the cases which the plaintiff cites in his brief and point out the features which distinguish them from the case at bar, a reference to some of them may be advantageous.

In the case of Elliott v. Newport St. R. Co., 18 R. I. 707, 28 Atl. 338, 31 Atl. 694, 23 L.R.A. 208, the plaintiff, with others, was riding upon the footboard of one of defendant's cars, holding on to two of the stanchions, supporting the roof of the car, on either side of him, with his face turned toward the opposite side of the car. The plaintiff had never ridden over that part of the defendant's road before that time and was ignorant of the location of the trolley pole by which he was struck. After passing eight of the trolley poles safely, the plaintiff, while in the act of taking his fare from his pocket, came in contact with the ninth trolley pole erected on the edge of the curbstone and ten and one-half inches from the outer edge of the footboard on which the plaintiff stood and was thrown to the ground and injured. The plaintiff was riding on the footboard without objection and there was testimony [153] that he did not hear any warning as to the danger of contact with the trolley poles. The court held that under all these circumstances and conditions the question of contributory negligence should have been left to the jury. It is quite different from the case at bar where the plaintiff was fully acquainted with the situation and made no effort to look out for his own safety.

In the case of Dahlberg v. Minneapolis, St. R. Co. 32 Minn. 404, 21 N. W. 545, 50 Am. Rep. 585, the plaintiff sat down at an open window in the defendant's car resting his hand upon and grasping the window sill so that his fingers only were outside of the car. While the car was passing, at considerable speed, a plank sheathing surrounding the construction work of a sewer, one of the planks, only one inch from the car, grazed his fingers. The plaintiff had no knowledge of the situation. There was also conflicting testimony upon several points and the court held that the case was for the jury. But stated the general proposition of law that if a man should thrust his hand outside of a car window carelessly and negligently, so as to come in contact with an object which was at a reasonably safe distance from the car, he could not recover at all. The facts in that case do not seem to warrant its application to the case at bar.

In the case of Kird v. New Orleans, etc. R. Co. 109 La. 525, 33 So. 587, 94 Am. St. Rep. 452, 60 L.R.A. 727, the injury to the plaintiff occurred by coming in contact with a bale of cotton placed upon and overhanging the defendant's platform to such an extent that it grazed the cars as they passed and struck the plaintiff's elbow which was resting on the window sill. We think that that case presented very different conditions from the case at bar.

In Francis v. New York Steam Co. 114 N. Y. 380, 21 N. E. 988, there was a conflict of testimony as to whether the plaintiff's arm, at the time of the accident, was wholly within the car or protruding therefrom. In Beaver v. Atchison, etc. R. Co. 56 Kan. 514, 43 Pac. 1136, the question was as to defendant's negligence in dumping a pile of cinders between two tracks where its inspector, the plaintiff, was required to pass in the discharge [154] of his duty. In Detroit, etc. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99, where the plaintiff sought to recover damages for injuries sustained by being struck by defendant's locomotive at a crossing, the testimony as to speed, warning, and the conduct of the plaintiff was conflicting. In Cummings v. Wichita R. etc. Co. 68 Kan. 218, 1 Ann. Cas. 708, 74 Pac. 1104, the plaintiff was riding in an open car without screens or guard rails, his back toward the front of the car. The track was double with trolley poles between. The car was wider than those previously used by the defendant, but the difference in width was unknown to the plaintiff. The position of the trolley poles had not been changed. The court said: "Might not plaintiff, by the absence of a rail or screen, have been assured that there was no danger to be apprehended?"

The other cases cited by the plaintiff are as readily distinguishable from the case at bar as the cases to which we have specifically referred and we do not think that they need to be separately considered.

We think that the nonsuit was fully justified by the evidence. The plaintiff's exception is overruled and the case is remitted to the Superior Court with direction to enter judgment for the defendant upon the nonsuit.

NOTE.

Contributory Negligence of Passenger in Permitting Part of His Body to Protrude from Car.

Introductory, 1218.

Passenger on Steam or Electric Train, 1218.
Passenger on Street Car, 1219.

Introductory.

The purpose of this note is to review the more recent cases which have passed on the question whether it is negligence as a matter of law for a passenger to allow a part of his body to protrude from the car in which he is riding, or whether the question of his negligence ought to be determined by the jury. The earlier cases are reviewed in the notes to Cummings v. Wichita R. & C. Co. 1 Ann. Cas. 708 and Taterurban R. etc. Co. v. Hancock, 116 Am. St. Rep. 710.

Passenger on Steam or Electric Train.

The later decisions are in accord with the majority view that it is negligence per se for a passenger, on a steam or electric train voluntarily or inadvertently to permit any part of his person to protrude beyond the outer surface of the car. Hewes v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 119 Ill. App. 393, affirmed 217 Ill. 500, 73 N. E. 515; Benedict v. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. 86 Minn. 224, 90 N. W. 360, 91 Am. St. Rep. 345, 57 L.R.A. 639; Talbert v. Charleston, etc. R. Co. 97 S. C. 465, 81 S. E. 182; Rose v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 81 Wash. 684, 143 Pac. 145, L.R.A. 1915B 166. Thus in Hewes v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. supra, it was held that it was negligence as a matter of law for a passenger to stand on the lower step of a railroad car and to swing his body out from the car a distance of some six inches where it appeared that the next stopping place was one hundred and fifty to two hundred feet ahead. To the same effect see Rose v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 81 Wash. 684, 143 Pac. 145, L.R.A. 1915B 166. Likewise in Benedict v. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. 86 Minn. 224, 90 N. W. 360, 91 Am. St. Rep. 345, 57 L.R.A. 639, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate leaned out from a car platform beyond the line of the car and was struck by a post adjacent to the track it was held that he was negligent and no recovery could be had for his death. So in Talbert v. Charleston, etc. R. Co. 97 S. C. 465, 81 S. E. 182, the court, in holding that an injured passenger was guilty of negligence, said: "No other reasonable inference can be drawn from the evidence but that the injury to the plaintiff was due to his own contributory negligence. He left the coach provided for passengers; had he remained there he would have been safe. He went on the platform; had he remained there he would have been safe. He descended the steps and stood on the lowest step in the company's yard; had he even then exercised due care and precaution, he would not have been injured; but he poked his head out beyond the line of the cars and looked backwards instead of forward, and was injured. His whole action was careless and negligent; and showed a total absence of care and precaution on his part."

But in Berine v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 177 Ill. App. 360, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff was sitting on the second step of a railroad car because the door leading into the car was locked and the platform of the car ahead was crowded, and that he suffered injuries because his leg, which he stretched out beyond the line of the car, was struck by an iron girder some eight inches from the car; it was held that the question of his negligence was for the jury. The court said: "It is insisted, however, that in stretching out his leg while seated there, Ruhle was carelessly and even recklessly unmindful of his duty to use such care as his situation required. But this was a most natural thing to do, and was an act fraught with no danger whatever under ordinary circumstances. Whether it was negligence per se depends, therefore, upon his knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the existence and location of the iron girder. There is no evidence that he had any actual knowledge. There was no gate or other barrier to serve as a warning. There was evidence that one of the trainmen warned the women who sat on the steps on the other side of the platform, but none that Ruhle or his companions were thus warned. There was also evidence that the train passed three or four similar girders after leaving Halstead Street and before it reached the girder at Throop street, but the top of the girders was only a little higher than the floor of the cars and there is no evidence tending to show that the girders would be likely to attract the attention of passengers in passing, nor that the train in fact passed any of such girders after Ruhle took his seat upon the steps. Furthermore, the platforms being vestibuled, the view of Ruhle was obstructed in all directions except straight out through the open door of the vestibule, and therefore any object which the train passed as close as these girders were to the train, would only appear in sight for an instant to those who were seated upon the platform or steps. Under these circumstances, we think it cannot be held, as a matter of law, or found, as a conclusion of fact, that Ruhle did not exercise that degree of care for his own safety which a reasonably prudent man in the same situation and with the same knowledge or means of knowledge, would have exercised under like circumstances."

It has been held that it was not negligence per se for a passenger on a crowded electric train to sit in the doorway of the baggage compartment of a car with his legs hanging outside, where it appeared that he took this position at the implied invitation of the trainmen who spread papers at the door for passengers to sit on, and that the conductor had taken tickets from passengers who during the trip occupied the same seat. Shields v. Minneapolis, etc. Electric Traction Co. 124 Minn. 327, 144 N. W. 1092, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49.

Where a passenger's hand was injured by reason of a window falling on it while she was riding in a railroad coach, it was held that the question of her negligence was for the jury though it appeared that in spite of the fact that the window had fallen twice in her presence she thereafter placed her hand in such a position that it was hit by the window in its third fall. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Lorton, 110 S. W. 857, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 680.

Passenger on Street Car.

It has been held that it is negligence per se for a passenger in a swiftly moving interurban electric car purposely and unnecessarily to extend his arm out of a window of the car. Interurban R. etc. Co. v. Hancock, 75 Ohio St. 88, 8 Ann. Cas. 1036, 78 N. E. 964, 116 Am. St. Rep. 710, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 997. And the reported case holds it to be negligence, as a matter of law for a passenger on an open car to reach his arm out over a guard rail which runs along left side of the car.

The weight of authority, however, is that in the case of street cars the question whether a passenger is guilty of negligence in permitting part of his body to protrude from the car is for the jury. Georgetown, etc. R. Co. v. Smith, 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 259, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 274; Chapman v. Capital Traction Co. 37 App. Cas. (D. C.) 479; Salmon v. City Electric R. Co. 124 Gr. 1056, 53 S. E. 575; Pell v. Joliet, etc. R. Co. 238 Ill. 510, 87 N. E. 542; La Barge v. Union Electric Co. 138 Ia. 691, 116 N. W. 816, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213; Wichita R. etc. Co. v. Cummings, 72 Kan. 694, 84 Pac. 121; Schloemer v. St. Louis Transit Co. 264 Mo. 99, 102 S. W. 566; Gardner v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. 223 Mo. 389, 18 Ann. Cas. 1166, 122 S. W. 1068; Smith v. St. Louis Transit Co. 126 Mo. App. 323, 97 S. W. 218; Boldt v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex.) 148 S. W. 831. See also Simpson v. Toronto, etc. R. Co. 16 Ont. L. Rep. 31, 10 Ont. W. Rep. 39, 11 Ont. W. Rep. 297. Thus it has been held that the question of negligence is for the jury where a passenger allows his arm to protrude through an open barred car window beyond the outer surface of the car. Chapman v. Capital Traction Co. 37 App. Cas. (D. C.) 479 (protrusion of four and one-half inches); Gardner v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. 223 Mo. 389, 18 Ann. Cas. 1166, 122 S. W. 1068 (slight protrusion); Smith v. St. Louis Transit Co. 126 Mo. App. 320, 97 S. W. 218 (slight protrusion). Boldt v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex.) 148 S. W. 831 (protrusion of two to four inches). And the same ruling has been made where the window was open and unguarded. Pell v. Joliet, etc. R. Co. 238 Ill. 510, 87 N. E. 542, wherein the court said: "In the absence of barrier or warning a passenger is not bound to presume that other cars will pass so close as barely to miss the car in which he is riding. There is usually a reasonable space between the passenger car and any structure or passing car, and at any rate the court could not say that cars are usually operated in such close proximity as they were in this case and that the passenger ought to have known that fact. The question whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to his injuries was one of fact, and in determining that question the manner in which the plaintiff was sitting, the facts that he had his arms on the window sill and projecting somewhat beyond it; and was holding the sill with his hand, were to be considered by the jury, the trial court and the Appellate Court; but the question was not one of law, to be determined by the court on the motion to withdraw the case from the jury and direct a verdict." So in Salmon v. City Electric R. Co. 124 Ga. 1056, 58 S. E. 575, wherein it appeared that a person who was riding on the rear unenclosed platform of a street car received injuries to his head when he projected it some two or three inches beyond the side line of the car in order to expectorate, it was held that the question of his negligence was for the jury. Likewise in La. Barge v. Union Electric Co. 138 Ia. 691, 116 N. W. 516, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213, wherein it appeared that a person who was standing inside of an open street car at the extreme left hand side thereof, next to a guard rail, was struck on the head by a car which came from the opposite direction, when he, in laughter, momentarily threw back his head so that it extended from three to six inches beyond an upright post which marked the side of the car, it was held that he was not, as a matter of law, negligent.

In New York the rule is still, as laid down in the case of Tucker v. Buffalo R. Co. 53 App. Div. 571, 65 N. Y. S. 989, that whether the question of negligence in such cases is one of law or fact must be determined by the circumstances of the case. Goller v. Fonda, etc. R. Co. 110 App. Div. 620, 96 N. Y. S. 483, wherein it was held that it could not be said as a matter of law, even though some part of a passenger's arm extended beyond a screen running across the outside of a street car window (it did not appear exactly how great the protrusion was) that the passenger was guilty of negligence.

A passenger who rests his arm on the sill of an open window in a car, without protruding it beyond the car, from which position it is thrown outside of the car by a sudden jolt, cannot be held to be guilty of negligence as a matter of law. Jacksonville Electric Co. v. Dillon, 67 Fla. 114, 64 So. 669. See also Schloemer v. St. Louis Transit Co. 204 Mo. 99, 102 S. W. 565; Lange v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. 151 Mo. App. 500, 122 S. W. 31. Nor is it negligence per se for a person who is suddenly seized with nausea to thrust his head out of an open street car window which is neither screened nor barred, by reason of which action his head comes in contact with a plank near the track and is injured. Lacey v. Minneapolis St. R. Co. 118 Minn. 301, 136 N. W. 878. And it has been held that the question of negligence was for the jury where a person who had become ill left his seat on the inside of a street car, went to the rear platform and leaned about six inches beyond the outer surface of the car in order to vomit. Gage v. St. Louis Transit Co. 211 Mo. 139, 109 S. W. 13. On the other hand in Christensen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. 137 Fed. 703, 70 C. C. A. 657, it was held that it was negligence per se for a passenger on a moving street car, who had suddenly become ill and who wished to vomit, to arise from his seat and thrust his head through an open window which was screened to a height of fourteen to sixteen inches above the sill, leaving an open space of about fourteen inches between the top of the screen and the top of the window.

CROUCH

v.

SOUTHERN SURETY COMPANY.

Tennessee Supreme Court—March 20, 1915.

131 Tenn. 260; 174 S. W. 1116.

Fidelity Insurance — Recovery of Premium.

Where a county trustee gave bond with a surety company as surety for the faithful performance of his duties, and paid a premium of $4,000 in advance, and died after six months, during which time the bulk of the funds passing through his hands were collected and disposed of, his administratrix cannot recover back one-half of the premium, since the risk had attached, and neither it nor the premium can be apportioned.

[See note at end of this case.]

Pleading — Necessity of Answer.

Where a bill seeking a recovery of part of advance premium paid for surety bond on ground of insured's death at expiration of half of period raises questions of estoppel and waiver which the demurrer does not reach, such questions require an answer.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Davidson county. ALLISON, Judge.

Action to recover premium. Mrs. Josie A. Crouch, plaintiff, and Southern Surety Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff.

Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Aust & McGugin and A. G. Moseley for appellant.

Thos. H. Malone and Larkin E. Crouch for appellee.

[261] GREEN, J.—Peter W. Crouch was elected trustee of Davidson county at the August election in 1912. He was inducted into office in September, 1912, and gave bond in the sum of $1,000,000 to the State and county, to secure the faithful performance of his duties during his term, with the defendant company as surety on his bond. At the same time a contract was entered into between Mr. Crouch and the defendant company, whereby the latter agreed to become his surety for a premium of $4,000 per annum. The first year's premium was paid in advance.

Mr. Crouch died in February, 1913, about six months after he qualified as trustee. This suit was brought by his widow, as administratrix, to recover $2,000, or one-half of the first annual premium paid to defendant company as aforesaid.

A demurrer was interposed by the defendant, which was overruled by the chancellor, and defendant permitted to appeal.

The first ground of demurrer makes the point that, when Mr. Crouch took charge of the office, the entire risk was assumed by the defendant and the entire premium earned under the contract; that the premium was not apportionable, and complainant was not entitled to a return of any part thereof, even though Mr. [262] Crouch died when about one-half of the year for which he was bonded remained.

The defendant invokes the rule applicable to marine insurance, life insurance, and fire insurance that, where a risk has once attached, even for a moment, the insured is not entitled to a return of any part of the premium paid.

This rule seems to have been first announced by Lord Mansfield, in the case of Tyrie v. Fletcher, 2 Cowp. (Eng.) 666. In that case a ship was insured for twelve months at a stipulated premium, but was captured by an enemy in about two months after sailing, and suit was brought against the insurer for a return of a proportionate part of the premium.

Lord Mansfield said:

"If the risk of the contract of indemnity has once commenced, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards. For, though the premium is estimated, and the risk depends upon the length and nature of the voyage, yet, if it has commenced, though it only be for twenty-four hours or less, the risk is run; the contract is for the whole entire risk, and no part of the consideration shall be returnable. They might have insured from two months to twelve months, or in any less or greater proportion, if they had thought proper so to do; but the fact is they have made no division of time at all, but the contract entered into is one entire contract from August 19, 1776, to August 19, 1777, which is the same as if it had expressly said: '... If you, the underwriter, [263] will insure me for twelve months, I will give you the entire sum; but I will not have any apportionment.' The ship sails, and the underwriter runs the risk for two months. No part of the premium shall be returned."

This case has been universally followed, and the rule therein stated has been applied to life insurance, fire insurance, and casualty insurance contracts. May on Insurance, section 567; Joyce on Insurance, section 1420; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 114 Fed. 268, 52 C. C. A. 154; Dickerson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 266 Ill. 270, 65 N. E. 604; New York F. Marine Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 141; Waters v. Allen, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 421; Connecticut Mut. Ins. Co. v. Pyle, 44 Ohio St. 19, 4 N. E. 466, 58 Am. Rep. 781; Hoyt v. Gilman, 8 Mass. 336; Joshua Hendy Machine-Works v. American Steam-Boiler Ins. Co. 86 Cal. 248, 24 Pac. 1018, 21 Am. St. Rep. 33; Blaeser v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co. 37 Wis. 31, 19 Am. Rep. 747.

This rule, in fact, seems not to have been questioned in any American case, but has been accepted and applied by the courts as settled law.

This rule is said to be based on just and equitable principles, for the insurer has, by taking upon himself the whole peril, become entitled to the whole premium, and, although the application of the rule may result in profit to the insurer, it is but a just compensation for the dangers or perils assumed. It has also been pointed out that the danger incurred may be greater in one moment than during the entire voyage, and it would be extremely difficult to fairly apportion the premium, [264] if a recovery of any part thereof were permissible. Joyce on Insurance, section 97.

It is difficult to see why this rule should not apply with equal vigor to fidelity insurance. Upon what fair basis can the premium, the consideration paid for undertaking the risk of fidelity, be apportioned?

This hazard is proportioned to the fallibility of the subject of insurance, and its extent is measured by the amount of funds in his custody. Moral stamina is a varying quantity, even in the same person. It is influenced by many things. It is impossible to say at what time the temptation of an individual bonded is greatest and the greatest risk is being run by the surety. Likewise the amount of money in the hands of the official, or the employee, fluctuates from day to day, and it is difficult and often impossible to determine on what day the liability of the surety is greatest in extent.

Who can say how much of the surety's risk was run during any given period? How then can it be determined what part of the premium has been earned during any given period? A premium cannot be apportioned where a risk is unapportionable. Premium and risk are interdependent and inseparable. It being impossible to say what part of a risk has been run, it is likewise impossible to say what part of a premium is unearned—what part should be returned.

The case before us illustrates the difficulty of attempting an apportionment of premiums in fidelity insurance, for it here appears that the great bulk of, [265] the funds passing through this official's hands were collected and disbursed by him on one month of the twelve for which he was bonded. That is to say, this surety's risk was greater in extent for this one month than during the remaining eleven months combined.

An argument is made on behalf of Mrs. Crouch in which it is urged that this contract of suretyship should be treated as a contract for personal services, which it became impossible to execute by reason of the death of one of the parties, and it is insisted that only so much of the consideration should be retained as might be recovered on a quantum meruit.

All insurance, fire and life, as well as guaranty, is somewhat personal in its nature, resting to a great extent on the reputation and character of the insured, but all such contracts are essentially entire. It is impossible to say what part of the risk has been run, or how much of the consideration has been earned at any particular time during the period of insurance. Even though, therefore, the completion of such a contract becomes impossible, there is no way to fix the value of the services rendered.

We think, therefore, the chancellor was in error in overruling the first ground of demurrer. It is impossible to apportion such a hazard, and the whole risk having attached, there can be no return of any part of the premium, upon the facts so far stated.

The bill contains other features, which we have not commented upon, with reference to certain dealings between the complainant and the surety company after [266] the death of Mr. Crouch. In these negotiations it is averred that Mrs. Crouch permitted the defendant to take charge of the trustee's office and obtain certain fees therefrom, after her husband's death, with the understanding that a portion of this premium was to be returned to her. Some questions of estoppel and waiver are made by the bill which the demurrer does not reach. At any rate, the matters so alleged require an answer. The chancellor correctly so held, overruling other grounds of demurrer.

The case will therefore be remanded for answer and further proceedings, and the surety company will pay the costs of this appeal.

NOTE.

Recovery of Premium Paid for Fidelity Insurance.

The reported case holds that where a public officer who has given a fidelity insurance bond dies during his term his personal representative is not entitled to a refund of the unearned portion of the premium. No other case appears to have passed on the recovery of unearned premiums paid for fidelity insurance, but the reported case applies the rule which has been held consistently as to insurance of other kinds. The prevailing doctrine seems to be that a recovery back is allowed (1) if the risk has never attached, (2) if the insurer withdraws from the contract, or (3) if the insured cancels the contract pursuant to a reserved option. See 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law p. 954. As to the recovery back of premiums paid for life insurance, see the note to Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Felix, 4 Ann. Cas. 191. In the recent case of Phummer v. Insurance Co. of North America (Me.) 95 Atl. 605, it was said of a recovery back of the premium paid on a marine policy: "Where the policy has once attached and the risk is entire there can be no such recovery." In Maryland Casualty Co. v. Little Rock R. etc. Co. 92 Ark. 304, 122 S. W. 994, it was held that a premium paid on a casualty insurance policy was not apportionable so as to admit of a recovery of a portion thereof which was paid under a mistaken belief that the scope of the insurance was thereby extended.

WOODLE

V.

SETTLEMENTER.

Oregon Supreme Court—April 23, 1914.

71 Oregon 25; 141 Pac. 205.

Appeal and Error — Liability on Bond — Abandonment of Appeal.

An undertaking on appeal from a justice of the peace is to be construed strictly in favor of the surety, and, where it is conditioned that the appellant will pay all costs and disbursements that may be awarded against him on the appeal, and satisfy any judgment that may be given against him in the appellate court, and the appeal is abandoned and no judgment is rendered in the appellate court, the surety is not liable.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah county: Monnow, Judge.

Action on appeal bond. Claude P. Woodle, plaintiff, and George T. Settlemyer, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Kimball & Ringo for appellant.

Christopherson & Matthews and Claude W. Devore for respondent.

[26] RAMSEY J.—On the 5th day of December, 1912, the plaintiff recovered against W. H. Harrington, in the justice's court for the district of Portland, in Multnomah County, a judgment for the sum of $150, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from July 27, 1912, and the further sum of $12.50 for costs of said action.

On the 26th of December, 1912, the plaintiff caused an execution to be issued upon said judgment, and placed the same in the hands of the constable of said Portland district for service. Said constable, by virtue of said writ, levied upon certain property of said Harrington, consisting of horses, wagons, and wood, to satisfy said writ of execution.

On the 31st day of December, 1912, the said judgment debtor, W. H. Harrington, gave notice of an appeal from said judgment to the Circuit Court of Multnomah County. Said notice was duly served, and then filed with the clerk of said justice's court, with the proof of service thereof. Thereafter, on said 31st day of December, 1912, the said W. H. Harrington, for the purpose of perfecting said appeal and staying the execution of said judgment, during the pendency of said appeal, filed in said justice's court his undertaking for the appeal, with George T. Settlemyer, the defendant herein, as surety. The following is a copy of said undertaking:

[27] "Whereas, the above-named plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant W. H. Harrington, the defendant herein, for one hundred fifty dollars and interest thereon from July 27, 1912, and costs and disbursements in a civil action tried before Justice Bell, a justice of the peace in and for said district, and said judgment having been rendered on the 5th day of December, A. D. 1912; and whereas the said W. H. Harrington is about to appeal from said judgment to the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon, for the County of Multnomah:

"Now, therefore, we, W. H. Harrington, appellant, and G. T. Settlemyer, of the County of Multnomah, State of Oregon, surety, undertake that said appellant will pay all costs and disbursements that may be awarded against him on the appeal, and that said appellant will satisfy any judgment that may be given against him in the appellate court, on the appeal.

"[Signed] W. H. Harrington, Geo. T. Settlemyer."

The plaintiff excepted to the sufficiency of the surety on said undertaking on January 2, 1913, and it does not appear that he justified or that any new undertaking was given. No transcript in said action was filed in the Circuit Court of Multnomah County, and said appeal was abandoned, and no judgment or order was ever made by said Circuit Court in relation to said action, on said supposed appeal. Said justice's court did not make any order allowing said appeal or staying proceedings therein. The docket of said court shows that an execution in said cause was issued December 26, 1912, but it fails to show that it was returned.

Before the commencement of this action, the plaintiff demanded of George T. Settlemyer and W. H. Harrington that they pay said judgment rendered in said justice's court; but they refused to pay it, and said judgment is wholly unpaid.

[28] The complaint in this cause alleges most of the facts above stated, and it alleges also that, in consideration of the execution and filing of said undertaking for the appeal and for a stay of proceedings in said cause, the constable of said district released from the levy in said cause all property that had been attached or levied upon therein.

The complaint alleges also that W. H. Harrington is insolvent and has left the state, and has no property out of which said judgment could be made.

The answer denies most of the allegations of the complaint, and sets up affirmatively, in substance, that no judgment of any kind was ever rendered or entered in said action in the Circuit Court of Multnomah County, on said appeal, against either said W. H. Harrington or George T. Settlemyer, for any sum or for any purpose, and that the execution in said cause issued out of said justice's court was not in any manner stayed.

The reply admitted the affirmative matter of said answer, excepting that part thereof relating to the stay of execution, and denied that said execution had not been stayed. This cause was tried without a jury, and findings and a judgment for the amount demanded by the complaint were rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

When all the evidence for the plaintiff was in, the defendant moved for a judgment of nonsuit; but the court below denied this motion. When the trial began in the court below, the defendant objected to the admission of any evidence, for the reason that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Said objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted to said ruling. There is no disagreement as to the material facts in this case.

[29] As stated supra, the plaintiff obtained a judgment in the justice's court against W. H. Harrington, and the latter gave notice of an appeal to the Circuit Court, and filed an undertaking in due form for the appeal, and for a stay of proceedings. The plaintiff filed exceptions to the sufficiency of the surety on the said undertaking, and the surety failed to justify. No new undertaking was filed. The defendant failed to file a transcript of said cause in the appellate court, and the appellate court never gave or entered any judgment of any kind in said cause. In fact, said cause was never in the appellate court for any purpose. Before beginning this action, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant that the latter pay said judgment rendered in said justice's court, and the defendant refused to pay said judgment.

The court below made no finding as to the release of the property of said Harrington by the constable, or as to the exceptions to the sufficiency of the surety on said undertaking, and we will not consider those matters; but, in the view that we take of the case, those facts would not materially affect the decision, if there were findings thereon.

1. The undertaking for the appeal is in proper form, and the promissory part thereof is as follows:

"Now, therefore, we, W. H. Harrington, appellant, and G. T. Settlemyer, of the county of Multnomah, State of Oregon, surety, undertake that said appellant will pay all costs and disbursements that may be awarded against him on the appeal, and that said appellant will satisfy any judgment that may be given against him in the appellate court on the appeal."

It is to be noted at the beginning that the surety on said undertaking promises two things: (a) That the appellant will pay all costs and disbursements that may be awarded against him on the appeal; (b) and [30] that said appellant will satisfy any judgment that may be given against him in the appellate court on the appeal.

The evidence shows that the appeal was abandoned, and there is no claim on the part of the plaintiff that the Circuit Court of Multnomah County ever had said appeal before it for any purpose or rendered any judgment of order of any kind in relation thereto. We assume that said appeal was not in the appellate court at all, and that the appellate court never awarded any costs or disbursements against the said appellant, Harrington, and that said appellate court did not give or enter any judgment against him on said abandoned appeal. Under such a state of facts, can the plaintiff, Woodlee, maintain an action against the defendant, Settlemyer, as surety, on said undertaking?

1. 32 Cyc. page 73, says:

"Sureties are said to be favorites of the law, and a contract of suretyship must be strictly construed to impose upon the surety only those burdens clearly within its terms, and must not be extended by implication or presumption. This rule is followed both at law and in equity."

2 Brandt, Suretyship and Guaranty (3 ed.) Section 513, says:

"Sureties on an appeal bond are bound only according to the terms of their contract. An appeal bond from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace provided that, if the parties appealing should pay and satisfy whatever judgment might be rendered by the Circuit Court of Hancock County upon the dismissal or trial of the appeal, then the obligation should be void. The venue in the case was changed from Hancock County to another county, and a judgment was there rendered against the party appealing. Held, the surety was not liable on the bond."

[31] In Phoenix Mfg. Co. v. Bogardus, 231 Ill. 531; 83 N. E. 285, the court says:

"The law is well settled that the undertaking of a surety is to be strictly construed, and his liability not to be extended by construction."

In State v. Dayton, 101 Md. 598, 61 Atl. 624, the court says:

"As to the general principle applicable to a case of this kind there can be no question. It is familiar law that the contract of sureties upon an official bond is subject to the strictest interpretation. They undertake for nothing which is not within the strict letter of their contract. The obligation is strictissimi juris, and nothing is to be taken by construction against the obligors. They have consented to be bound to a certain extent only, and their liability must be found within the terms of that consent."

In Kirchbaum v. Blair, 98 Va. 85, 34 S. E. 895, part of the syllabus is:

"But, having ascertained what the contract is, he is bound by this alone. There is no implied liability resting on him. His liability is always strictissimi juris, and is not to be extended by implication or construction."

In Omaha First Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 55 Neb. 419, 420, 77 N. W. 757, the court says:

"That a surety is entitled to stand upon the strict terms of his contract is a proposition of law upon which the authorities all agree. To the extent, and in the manner, pointed out in his obligation he is bound, but no farther. It has been often said by judges and text-writers that sureties are favorites of the law, and that their liability will not be extended by implication."

Childs, Suretyship and Guaranty, pages 124, 125, says:

"While a surety is denominated a favorite of the law, there is a very limited field for the application of [32] this doctrine. The nature of the contract invokes equitable consideration, but the general rules for the construction of contracts are not excluded thereby. This liability will not be extended by implication and his contract is strictly construed. In cases of doubt, the doubt is solved generally in his favor."

The surety on said undertaking agreed that:

"The appellant will pay all costs and disbursements that may be awarded against him on the appeal, and that said appellant will satisfy any judgment that may be given against him in the appellate court on the appeal."

This undertaking is to be construed strictly in favor of the surety. He is bound for nothing that is "not nominated in the bond."

The surety undertakes two things: (1) That the appellant will pay all costs and disbursements that may be awarded against him on the appeal; (2) that the appellant will satisfy any judgment that may be given against the appellant on the appeal. The undertaking of the surety was to pay any judgment that should be awarded against the appellant by the appellate court, and, as that court did not render any judgment against the appellant, there was nothing for the surety to pay. The surety did not undertake that the appellant would pay the judgment rendered by the justice's court. Construing said undertaking according to its terms, the surety promised that the appellant would pay any judgment that the appellate court should render in said cause against the appellant, and he incurred no liability on said undertaking, because the appellate court rendered no judgment against the appellant on said appeal.

11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1013, that work says: "As a general rule the rendition and entry of a final judgment of affirmance on appeal is required to subject the sureties to liability on the bond."

[33] In Roppenhausen v. Sealey, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 451, the court says:

"Although there was an order of the general term affirming the judgment of August 13, 1860, no judgment of affirmance could be entered, if the defendants in that judgment availed themselves of the leave to answer contained in and forming a part of the said order. When those defendants answered, a new issue, differing in its character and mode of trial from that upon which the prior judgment had been entered, was formed, and the right to enter a judgment of affirmance, or to issue an execution on any judgment of affirmance, was forever gone. The plaintiff must have the right to enter and collect a judgment of affirmance before he can proceed against the sureties in such an undertaking as the present. The plaintiff has never acquired such a right."

In Wood v. Derrickson, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 410, the court says:

"The action was upon an undertaking given on appeal, and was conditioned for the payment of all costs and damages which might be awarded on appeal, and of the judgment of affirmance. It did not require the issuing of an execution, but was forfeited as soon as the affirmance of the judgment took place, and the debtor made default in its payment."

In Gregory v. Stark, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 612, which was an action on an appeal bond, the court says:

"The moment judgment was rendered in the appeal cause, unless the money was paid immediately, the condition of the bond was forfeited, and action could be brought upon it at any time before that judgment was actually satisfied."

2 Cyc. 946, says:

"To establish the breach of the condition to satisfy the affirmed judgment, it is only necessary to show that after said affirmance the judgment has not been satisfied."

[34] The same volume, on page 933, says:

"Before a breach of the condition to prosecute to effect can be maintained, there must have been a final judgment of the appellate court, dismissing the appeal or affirming the judgment appealed from; which judgment must be alleged and proved."

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law & Pr. 943, says:

"As a general rule, the rendition and entry of a final judgment of affirmance on appeal is required to subject the sureties to liability on the bond."

The same volume, on page 944, says:

"It is generally held that, upon affirmance of the judgment from which the appeal is prosecuted, the liability of the sureties upon the appeal bond, or undertaking becomes fixed and absolute."

See, also, Steinhauer v. Colmar, 11 Colo. App. 494, 55 Pac. 291; Blackmore v. Winders, 144 N. C. 212, 56 S. E. 874; Odell v. Wootten, 38 Ga. 224.

The liability of the defendant on said undertaking was contingent on the entry of a judgment in the appellate court against the appellant in said action. We have no power to extend the defendant's liability beyond the terms stated in the undertaking. It is the province of courts to construe contracts, but not to make them for parties.

As the Circuit Court of Multnomah County did not enter any judgment against Harrington in said cause upon said supposed appeal, the defendant herein, as surety upon said appeal, is not liable to the plaintiff herein upon said undertaking. The undertaking sued on did not provide that the appellant named therein should prosecute said appeal, or that, in case he should abandon said appeal, the surety would pay the judgment appealed from.

[35] In order to recover upon said undertaking, it was necessary to allege and prove that the Circuit Court of Multnomah County, on said supposed appeal, rendered judgment against the appellant, Harrington. The complaint does not allege that such a judgment was rendered, but does allege that said supposed appeal was abandoned; and hence the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

We hold that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that there was not evidence sufficient to make out a prima facie case for the plaintiff; and that the court below erred in overruling the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the case is remanded to the court below, and that court is directed to enter a proper judgment dismissing said cause.

Reversed with directions.

Moore, Burnett and Bean, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied June 2, 1914.

NOTE.

Effect of Abandonment or Dismissal of Appeal on Liability of Sureties on Appeal Bond.

Scope of Note, 1226.

General Rules, 1226.

Failure to Perfect Appeal, 1228.

Express Condition as to Dismissal, 1231.

Dismissal by Consent, 1232.

Scope of Note.

It is the intention of this note to consider those cases which have discussed the effect of the abandonment or dismissal of an appeal on the liability of the sureties on the appeal bond.

For a consideration of the liability of the sureties on an appeal bond where the appeal is dismissed because of the insufficiency of the bond, see the note to Bortree v. Dunkin, Ann. Cas. 1915C 1905.

General Rules.

A surety on an appeal bond is ordinarily liable in case of a dismissal of the appeal. Thus the dismissal or abandonment of an appeal operates as an affirmation of the judgment within the meaning of an appeal bond or undertaking conditioned to respond in case the judgment is affirmed.

Arkansas.—Compare Ashley v. Brasil, 1 Ark. 144, Miller v. Heard, 7 Ark. 50; Scammon v. State, 28 Ark. 396.

California.—Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 324; Chamberlin v. Reed, 16 Cal. 207; Chase v. Beraud, 29 Cal. 138. See also Osborn v. Hendrickson, 6 Cal. 175. Compare In re Kennedy, 129 Cal. 384, 62 Pac. 64.

Colorado.—McMichael v. Groves, 14 Colo. 540, 23 Pac. 1006; Shannon v. Dodge, 18 Colo. 164, 32 Pac. 61; Lux v. McLeod, 19 Colo. 465, 36 Pac. 246; Long v. Sullivan, 21 Colo. 109, 40 Pac. 350; Wilson v. Welch, 8 Colo. App. 210, 46 Pac. 106; Creswell v. Herr, 9 Colo. App. 185, 48 Pac. 155. Compare Frees v. Engelbrecht, 3 Colo. 377.

Illinois.—McConnel v. Swailes, 2 Scam. 571; Sutherland v. Phelps, 22 Ill. 92; Koelling v. Wachening, 174 Ill. App. 321. See also Garrick v. Chamberlain, 97 Ill. 620. Compare Blair v. Reading, 103 Ill. 375.

Indiana.—See Reeve v. Andrews, 7 Ind. 207; Keitzinger v. Reynolds, 11 Ind. 545; Stultz v. Zahn, 117 Ind. 297, 20 N. E. 154.

Iowa.—Coon v. McCormack, 69 Ia. 539, 29 N. W. 455. See also Jewett v. Shoemaker, 124 Ia. 561, 100 N. W. 531.

Kentucky.—Harrison v. Bank of Kentucky, 3 J. J. Marsh. 375; Fearsons v. Wright, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 747, abstract; Harris v. West, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 334, abstract.

Maryland.—Compare Keen v. Whittington, 40 Md. 489.

Mississippi.—Pase v. Payne, 63 Miss. 239.

Missouri.—Arkansas Valley Trust Co. v. Corbin, 179 S. W. 484. Compare Hill v. Keller, 157 Mo. App. 710, 139 S. W. 523.

Montana.—State v. Bjerman, 12 Mont. 15, 29 Pac. 534.

Nebraska.—See Gudnaer v. Kilpatrick, 14 Neb. 347, 15 N. W. 798; Dunsterman v. Storey, 40 Neb. 447, 58 N. W. 949.

New York.—Compare Watson v. Husson, 1 Duer, 242, affirmed 14 N. Y. 60.

Oklahoma.—McClain v. Starr, 150 Pac. 666.

Oregon.—Simpson v. Prather, 5 Ore. 86.

Pennsylvania.—Mair's Estate, 12 Phila. 2, 54 Leg. Int. 20.

Texas.—Compare Givens v. Blocker, 23 Tex. 633.

In McConnel v. Swailes, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 571, the court said: "This court does not entertain a doubt that the dismissal of an appeal, or certiorari, is equivalent to a regular, technical affirmation of the judgment, so as entitle the party to claim a forfeiture of the bond, and have his action therefore. The bond given in such case is conditioned 'to pay the debt and costs, in case the judgment shall be affirmed, on the trial of the appeal.' What is the object of this requirement, and what its meaning and intention? Manifestly to secure the opposite party in his debt and costs, in case the judgments shall not be reversed; in case he shall be, in the circuit court, the successful party. By a dismissal of the appeal, either by the court, or by the act of the appellant himself, the appellee is the successful party; he has not lost what he gained before the magistrate. He is placed in the same situation he occupied before the appeal was taken; and we see no propriety in attributing to such a judgment of dismissal less efficacy than to a more formal and technical one of affirmance." So in Harrison v. Bank of Kentucky, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 375, it was said: "The main, if not only object in requiring an appeal bond, is to secure to the plaintiff in the judgment the payment of such judgment, with costs and damages, when awarded, unless it should be reversed by the appellate court; and to attain that object such must be considered to be its legal effect, in every case where it has been executed in the words of the act, or in other words substantially the same. In such cases we must remember that 'qui haeret in litere, haeret in cortice;' we must regard substance and not form; or the law will have been in vain; and under that view of it the dismissal must be considered as a virtual affirmance of the judgment." In Coon v. McCormack, 69 Ia. 539, 20 N. W. 455, the court said: "The word 'affirm,' as used in the statute and bond, should not be construed in a narrow and strictly technical sense, but a broad and comprehensive meaning should be attached thereto; that is to say, if the legal effect of the dismissal is to affirm the judgment, then the latter includes the former, and both mean the same thing." It will be conceded that there may be cases where a dismissal would not amount to an affirmance; as an appeal has not been perfected by the service of the requisite notice. But when the appeal has been perfected, and it is dismissed by the supreme court, the ordinary rule and effect is that it amounts to an affirmance, and he who asserts the contrary must plead and establish such fact."

In Long v. Sullivan, 21 Colo. 109, 40 Pac. 359, it was held that the dismissal of an appeal might be made without prejudice to another appeal or to a writ of error, but, unless another appeal or supersedeas was taken or allowed within thirty days, the dismissal operated as an affirmance. See to the same effect Mueller v. Kelly, 8 Colo. App. 527, 47 Pac. 72; McMichael v. Groves, 14 Colo. 540, 23 Pac. 1006.

On the other hand, in the case of In re Kennedy, 129 Cal. 384, 62 Pac. 64, it was held that the dismissal of an appeal, as prematurely taken did not operate as an affirmance of the judgment. And in Watson v. Husson, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 242, affirmed as Drummond v. Husson, 14 N. Y. 60, the court said: "The undertaking in this case is in the precise words of the statute, and the only question is, whether the contingency upon which the liability of the defendants was to attach has occurred. The contract of the defendant is, that 'If the judgment appealed from or any part thereof be affirmed' the appellant shall pay, etc. A dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution, is clearly not an affirmance of the judgment. This court has decided nothing whatever in respect to the validity of the judgment." So in Freas v. Engelbrecht, 3 Colo. 377, it was held that the dismissal of an appeal was not the equivalent of the affirmance of a judgment. The court said: "It may be said that by the judgment below, the party prevailing is prima facie established in his title to that which is adjudged to him, and ought not to be delayed in having the lawful fruits of his recovery by an interminable series of appeals and writs of error, successively discontinued by default of his adversary. But the allowance of process of review in the first instance implies that the judgments even of superior courts are not above the suspicion of error, and if after the first appeal or writ of error, supersedeas be denied (as it seems is the rule), the inconvenience to the defendant in error is not more striking than in other cases. Moreover in the case of appeals, the appellee is in general indemnified for the delay which he has sustained by the damages which the law awards upon discontinuance. Upon reason and analogy, therefore, the discontinuance of an appeal ought not to be treated as an affirmation of the judgment." In Blair v. Redding, 103 Ill. 375, it was held that the surety on a supersedeas bond was not liable where the writ of error was dismissed because of want of jurisdiction. The court said: "The decree contained in the transcript was not 'affirmed' by a dismissal of the writ of error in the Supreme Court. It was dismissed for want of jurisdiction in the court to hear the writ at all. That was in no sense an affirmance of the original decree. A dismissal of a writ of error for want of prosecution when the court has jurisdiction of the case, has always been treated as an affirmance of the decree or judgment, within the meaning of the usual conditions of such bonds. But the rule must be different where the court has no jurisdiction in the premises. It is for the obvious reason the court has no jurisdiction to pronounce a judgment of affirmance, and it would be a non sequitur to say a court may affirm a decree when it has no jurisdiction to hear the case for any purpose." See also Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Livingston, 16 Colo. App. 257, 65 Pac. 413; Henry v. Great Northern R. Co. 16 Waah. 417, 47 Pac. 805.

A dismissal or abandonment of an appeal caused by the failure to prosecute the same, constitutes a breach of an appeal bond conditioned for the prosecution of the appeal with effect. Callbreath v. Coyne, 48 Colo. 199, 109 Pac. 428; Mueller v. Kelly, 8 Colo. App. 527, 47 Pac. 72; Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Livingston, 16 Colo. App. 257, 65 Pac. 413; Reeves v. Andrews, 7 Ind. 207; McKinney v. Hartman, 143 Ind. 224, 42 N. E. 681; Everly v. State, 10 Ind. App. 15, 37 N. E. 556; Fitzgerald v. Wellington, 37 Kan. 460, 15 Pac. 582; Champomier v. Washington, 2 La. Ann. 1013; Wilcox v. Daniels, 22 Mo. 493; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lucky Budge Min. Co. (Mo.) 180 S. W. 1011; Marryott v. Young, 33 N. J. L. 336; Levine v. Lindenthall, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. (Tex.) § 1149; Trent v. Rhomberg, 66 Tex. 249, 18 S. W. 510; McSweeney v. Reeves, 28 Nova Scotia 422. See also Perreault v. Bevan, 5 B. & C. 284, 11 E. C. L. 230; Tummons v. Ogle, 6 El. & Bl. 571, 89 E. C. L. 571; Jackson v. Hanson, 8 M. & W. (Eng.) 477; Biggs v. Rickards, 3 Har. (Del.) 283. Compare Shedd v. Cooke, 33 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 505, judgment affirmed 86 Ohio St. 364, 99 N. E. 1132; Com. v. Krause, 198 Pa. St. 391, 48 Atl. 256. Thus in Everly v. State, 10 Ind. App. 15, 37 N. E. 556, the court said: "The ordinary conditions of appeal are that the defendant or principal obligor will prosecute his appeal to effect, and pay the judgment that may be rendered against him on appeal. If he fails in either of these conditions, the bond is subject to an action for the penalty therein provided. In the present case, the condition violated is, in effect, the prosecution of the appeal to effect within the year allowed for such appeals." So in McKinney v. Hartman, 143 Ind. 224, 42 N. E. 681, it was said: "Therefore, if, after perfecting the term time appeal, the appealing party had dismissed such appeal, there would and could be no breach of that condition of the bond obligating the appealing party to pay the judgment rendered or affirmed in this court against him, because in that event there would be no judgment rendered or affirmed against him in this court. In such a case there would be a breach of the other condition in the bond, namely, to duly prosecute the appeal. The dismissal of the appeal would not be a due prosecution thereof; it would be an abandonment of the appeal."

Failure to Perfect Appeal.

The dismissal or abandonment of an appeal for failure to perfect the same or to observe statutory or other requirements, operates as an affirmance rendering the sureties liable on the bond. Duntermann v. Storey, 40 Neb. 447, 58 N. W. 949; Flanagan v. Cleveland, 44 Neb. 58, 62 N. W. 297; Cohen v. Cover, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 7, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 678; Morgan v. Soisson, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 141; Winchester v. Rich, 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 46. See also Beale v. Dougherty, 3 Bin. (Pa.) 432. Compare Shivry v. Grauer, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 471, 2 Pa. Dist. 387. Thus in Winchester v. Rich, supra, the court said: "The appeal was not quashed because of any defect in the recognizance, but because the original defendants had failed to perform a collateral act, which the court held they were required to do. . . . When an appeal is taken from a judgment of a justice, the ordinary course results in the entry of a judgment after a jury trial, but it was not necessary that there should be a jury trial in order to constitute an affirmance of the judgment of the justice, within the meaning of the recognizance of the appellee. The failure of the party appealing from the judgment of the justice to file the transcript in the common pleas within the time allowed by law, would in such a case constitute an affirmance of the judgment. . . . That judicial act of the appellate court by which the controversy between the parties comes to an end, and the plaintiff is placed in position to collect his judgment, is an affirmance of the judgment of the justice. When the appeal is dismissed, or quashed or stricken off because it is not filed in time the judgment is a final one and prevents all further proceedings in the suit, constituting an affirmance of the judgment." And in Cohen v. Cover, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 7, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 678, wherein it appeared that the petition in error filed was dismissed for the reason that the plaintiff in error had failed to have the record in the case printed as required by the practice of the court, it was held that the judgment of dismissal was equivalent to and in substance an affirmation of the judgment. So in Duntermann v. Storey, 40 Neb. 447, 58 N. W. 949, the surety was held liable on appeal bond conditioned for the payment of the judgment in case of an affirmance. The bond recited that the defendant had filed in the supreme court the transcript and petition in error for the purpose of obtaining a reversal. Proceedings in error or appeal however were never instituted. The court said: "By the execution and filing of the supersedeas bond Bernhart took one step in the proceedings to have reviewed on error the Storey judgment. He then abandoned all further attempts to reverse the judgment, thus leaving it in full force. The judgment, then, is in the same plight that it would have been had Bernhart filed his transcript of the record of said judgment and bill of exceptions in this court and then had neglected to have a summons in error issued within one year from the date of the judgment and this court had dismissed such error proceeding. We have already seen that had this court dismissed the error proceedings, by reason of the failure of Bernhart to comply with some requirement necessary to a review of the judgment on error, the dismissal of the proceedings would in effect be an affirmance of the judgment rendered. Is not the effect on the judgment just the same, whether proceedings in error be instituted and then dismissed without an examination of the case upon its merits, or whether the judgment debtor, after taking one or more steps looking towards reviewing the judgment on error, abandons the proceedings? A judgment debtor, by filing a supersedeas bond with the clerk of the district court and a petition in error in this court, stays the execution of the judgment at least for one year from the date of its rendition, as the filing in this court of the petition in error does not invest this court with jurisdiction over the person of the judgment creditor. For this purpose it is necessary that a summons in error shall be issued within a year from the date of its rendition, although it may be served afterwards. Now, if the contention of counsel for the plaintiff in error be correct, a judgment debtor, by filing a supersedeas bond with the clerk of the court and a petition in error here, may stay the execution of the judgment for a year, and then, by voluntarily abandoning the proceedings in error, or by failing to have a summons in error issued, may thus deprive the judgment creditor of the power of collecting his judgment for the length of time intervening between its rendition and the dismissal of the error proceedings, and at the end of that time leave the judgment creditor with no more security for the collection of his judgment than he had on the date of its rendition. Such a construction of the statute would deprive the judgment creditor of the very rights given him by the statute. It would be in effect a judicial enactment of a stay law without bond. A judgment is the final and solemn adjudication and determination of the rights of the parties in and to the subject-matter litigated, and a creditor on obtaining a judgment against his debtor is entitled to an immediate execution for the satisfaction of such judgment, unless the judgment debtor stays such execution by complying with the provisions of the statute therefor." Likewise in Morgan v. Soisson, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 141, it was held that where after a judgment is entered a person holds himself as bail for an appeal "conditioned for the payment of the debt, interest and costs that may be legally recovered against the said appellant company" in accord with a statute providing that in such case bail "shall be taken absolute for the payment of the debt, interest and costs on the affirmance of the judgment," the surety is liable, although the appeal is never entered in the appellate court. The court said: "The appellant contends that, the judgment never having been affirmed, he is not liable upon his recognizance and that the judgment of the justice of the peace against him in the suit on the recognizance was, therefore, void and the appeal therefrom should have been sustained by the court. This contention is based upon the meaning given by the appellant to the word 'affirmance,' as used in the act of assembly. He confines its application to the ratification or upholding of a judgment of a lower court by an appellate court, but it has a much broader meaning than this. An affirmance may be 'the confirmation of a voidable act by the party acting, who is to be bound thereby or by a court in the manner contended for by the appellant and it may be either express or implied.' See 1 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 112. Even if the appellant's contention as to the limited meaning of the word 'affirmance' were correct, we would hesitate long before allowing such a technicality to prevail, but it is not necessary for us to consider this narrow aspect of the question. The judgment obtained before the justice by the plaintiff against the corporation was voidable and could be rendered void; first, by an appeal; second, by the entry of the appeal in the court of common pleas within the time limited by law, and third, by the reversal of that judgment in the said court in the manner pointed out by law. The appeal was taken; the judgment could be affirmed either by the act of the appellant in failing to enter the appeal or by the formal action of the court." But in Shivery v. Grauer, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 471, 2 Pa. Dist. 387, it was held that the failure of a corporation to enter an appeal at the next term after the appeal was taken did not fix the liability of the surety, as the condition of the recognizance was not broken.

The dismissal or abandonment of an appeal for failure to perfect the same or to observe statutory or other requirements constitutes a breach of an appeal bond conditioned to prosecute, or to prosecute with effect, the appeal, and renders a surety liable on the bond. Dexter v. Sayward, 84 Fed. 296; Ellis v. Hull, 23 Cal. 160; Thalheimer v. Crow, 13 Colo. 397, 22 Pac. 779; Meserve v. Clark, 115 Ill. 580, 4 N. E. 770; Woods v. Thomas, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 553; Rock v. Gordon, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 192; Davis v. Sturgis, 1 Ind. 213; Gavisk v. McKeever, 37 Ind. 484; Taylor v. Conway, man. unrep. Cas. (La.) 193; Nowlin v. Tibbits, 44 Mich. 77, 8 N. W. 118; Healy v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228, 55 N. W. 686; Bernecker v. Miller, 44 Mo. 126; Skidmore v.

Hull, 33 Mo. App. 41; Campbell v. Harrington, 93 Mo. App. 315; Flannagan v. Cleveland, 44 Neb. 58, 62 N. W. 297; Philbrick v. Buxton, 40 N. H. 384; Michael v. Ball, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 406, 27 S. W. 948. See also Adams v. Thompson, 18 Neb. 541, 26 N. W. 316; Estads Land, etc. Co. v. Ansley, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 24 S. W. 933. Compare Gregory v. O'Brien, 13 N. J. L. 11; Burnis v. Peacock, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 482, 3 West. L. Month. 264; McIntosh v. Langtree, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 317; Brown v. Newton, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 436. Thus in Philbrick v. Buxton, 40 N. H. 384, the court said: "The recognizance is conditioned that two distinct things shall be done; the appeal must be prosecuted by the appellant, and he must also pay the costs which may be recovered against him; and a failure to perform either of these conditions forfeits the recognizance, and that forfeiture cannot be cured by a performance of some other part of the condition." And in Healy v. Newton, 98 Mich. 228, 55 N. W. 666, wherein it appeared that the principal in a bond "took no further proceedings to take said cause to the Supreme Court on writ of error than the settlement of said bill of exceptions and never sued out a writ of error in said cause, and did not prosecute said writ of error to effect," the court held that an action would lie on the bond. So in Gagick v. McKeever, 37 Ind. 484, the court said: "The statute . . . requires that one condition of such bond, among others, shall be, 'that he will duly prosecute his appeal.' This condition is not in this bond, and it is therefore defective, but this defect may be cured by a suggestion . . . ; and this court has held, that when the bond is filed with and made a part of the complaint, and the defect is palpable from inspection, it is a sufficient suggestion of the defect." In Ellis v. Hull, 23 Cal. 169, the court said: "This is an action upon an undertaking on appeal, and the only ground of error assigned is that no appeal had been taken, and therefore that the undertaking was without consideration. The evidence sustains the findings of the court that an appeal had been taken, which was dismissed by the Supreme Court with costs, on the ground of the failure of the appellants to file the transcript. The objection, therefore, is not well taken." See to the same effect Thalheimer v. Crow, 13 Colo. 397, 22 Pac. 779; Flannagan v. Cleveland, 44 Neb. 58, 62 N. W. 297. And in Meserve v. Clark, 115 Ill. 580, 4 N. E. 770, it was held that a surety on an appeal bond was liable, where the appeal was dismissed "on the ground the record had not been filed within the time prescribed by law." In Bernecker v. Miller, 44 Mo. 126, the court said: "The appeal was not prosecuted with effect, for no steps were taken by Miller, after filing the bond, to perfect or prosecute his appeal. This condition having been broken, the liability to a judgment for the penalty is complete, and the only question is one of damages." See also Rock v. Gordon, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 192, wherein the court said: "We think the first breach is well assigned. We understand the averment to be, that Gordon having prayed an appeal and entered into bond, wholly neglected to take further steps in prosecuting it to effect. This is sufficient. . . . The third breach is also well assigned. . . . A bond with a condition to prosecute an appeal with effect, was broken by an irregularity which caused the appeal to be dismissed." In Davis v. Sturgis, 1 Ind. 213, it appeared that the appellant moved for a dismissal of the appeal because of the insufficiency of the bond, the appeal being dismissed because of failure on the part of the appellant to comply with an order for a further bond. It was held that the non-prosecution of the appeal to effect was a breach of the condition of the appeal bond. The court said: "The operation of the foregoing section, taken together, is, to make the bond filed with, and approved by, the justice, effectual to remove the cause to the Circuit Court, hold it there until such bond is shown, in that Court, to be insufficient, and to stay, in the mean time, execution upon the judgment of the justice. The bond, therefore, though it may afterwards be shown to be insufficient, is not void ab origine, and is a valid consideration. And as the law permits the bond filed with the justice, though approved by him, to be shown to be insufficient in the circuit court, and requires, in that event, a further bond, the giving of such further bond, when required by the Circuit Court, must be regarded as one of the acts necessary to be performed by the appellant in prosecuting his appeal to effect, and hence included in the condition of the first bond. A failure, therefore, to give such further bond, when so required, is a breach of the condition of the first, and renders the surety in it liable to an action; and we think no such estoppel as contended for exists."

On the other hand in Burnis v. Peacock, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 482, 3 West. L. Month. 264; it was held that a failure to perfect an appeal, neither party filing a transcript, was not a breach of the terms of an undertaking to prosecute it to effect and without unnecessary delay. The court said: "Now, the condition of the appeal undertaking sued on in this case, is not that the appellant shall perfect an appeal—not that he will perform the conditions required by the statute to give the appellata jurisdiction—but it simply is that if the appeal shall be perfected, then the appellant will prosecute it to effect and without unnecessary delay." This is apparent from the words used." And in McIntosh v. Langtree, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 317, it appeared the condition of a bond for the prosecution of a certiorari was "to prosecute his certiorari with effect, or in case he fail, pay and satisfy, whatever judgment the said court might render finally against him." The court held that the condition did not authorize a judgment against the security where the suit was dismissed on a rule to justify the surety. See also Brown v. Newton, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 436. So in Gregory v. Obrian, 13 N. J. L. 11, it was held that a defect in an affidavit on which the appeal was granted which caused the dismissal of the appeal, did not constitute a failure to "prosecute the appeal," within the condition of the appeal bond.

In a few cases a dismissal of an appeal at the instance of the appellee because of some defect of procedure has been held not to render the sureties liable, the precise terms of the bond not appearing. Thus in Zimmer v. Massie, 117 Mo. App. 344, 98 S. W. 559, a motion made by the appellee to dismiss an appeal because it was not taken in time, was sustained. Thereafter the appellee instituted an action against the appellant's bondsmen, but the court held that the appellee was bound by the judgment he had obtained and could not recover. In Martin v. Crocker, 62 Ia. 328, 17 N. W. 533, a statute providing that when an appeal was dismissed judgment should be rendered on the appeal bond was held not to apply to a dismissal of the appeal because it was not taken within the time specified in the statute. In Tilden v. Worrell, 30 Pa. St. 272, it was held that the nonprossing of a writ of error for the reason that the bail did not justify on exception to their sufficiency was not such a nonprossing as was contemplated by the statute making the bail liable in case of affirmance of judgment or of discontinuing or nonprossing the writ of error.

The general rule that the surety is liable in case of a dismissal for defects in procedure has been enforced in other cases wherein the terms of the bond do not appear. Thus in L. Kimball Printing Co. v. Southern Land Improvement Co. 57 Minn. 37, 58 N. W. 868, an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial was dismissed on motion of the plaintiff, for the failure of the appellant to serve his paper book and points and authorities. The court said: "The question now presented is as to the liability of the sureties upon the bond for the full amount of the judgment in the Municipal Court. On the trial of the present action the court held that the liability of the sureties arising out of the extra-statutory condition above quoted was simply for the amount of the judgment entered in this court on the order of dismissal. The controlling words used and to be construed are, 'after decision of the Supreme Court,' and, of course, as against these sureties, they are to be construed with reasonable strictness. It is contended by the appellant that a dismissal under the rules is a decision within their meaning, but we think not, as did the court below. Certainly there was no decision upon the merits. Every question which could have been presented on that appeal might have been raised subsequently on an appeal from the judgment." In Simonds v. Heinn, 22 La. Ann. 296, it appeared that the appellee took a rule on the appellant to test the solvency of the surety on the bond. The appellant abandoned the appeal fearing he could not sustain the solvency of the surety. The court held that the abandonment did not release the surety. In Love v. Estes, 6 Vt. 286, it was held that under a statute providing that if the appellant did not enter and prosecute the appeal, the appellee might procure an affirmance of the judgment, such an affirmance was prerequisite to an action on the appeal bond. To the same effect, see Probate Court v. Glead, 35 Vt. 24. In Lux v. McLeod, 19 Colo. 465, 36 Pac. 246, the statute involved provided as follows: "The security in any appeal bond shall be liable thereon for the amount of the original judgment and all costs thereon, in case the said appeal be dismissed." Saying that this statutory provision entered into and became a part of the condition of the bond, the court held the surety liable on a bond given on an appeal from a justice of the peace to the county court for the amount so specified, where the appeal was dismissed because of a failure to pay the docket fee.

Express Condition as to Dismissal.

If a bond is conditioned for the payment of the judgment in case the appeal is dismissed, the sureties are liable whatever may be the cause of the dismissal. Adams v. Billingsley, 107 Ark. 38, 153 S. W. 1105; Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368, 27 Pac. 296; Noaln v. Fidelity, etc. Co. 2 Cal. App. 1, 82 Pac. 1119; Wheeler v. McCabe, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 283; Clark v. Miles, 2 Pin. (Wis.) 432, 2 Chand. 94. See also Blair v. Reading, 103 Ill. 375. Compare Rooley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 457. Thus in Nolan v. Fidelity, etc. Co. 2 Cal. App. 1, 82 Pac. 1119, the court said: "One of the conditions of a stay bond is that, if the appeal be dismissed, the judgment and costs will be paid, and sureties on such bonds take the risk that appeals may be erroneously dismissed." In Wheeler v. McCabe, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 283, the undertaking sued on was "to the effect that if the judgment appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, the appellant will pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment, or the part of such amount as to which the judgment shall be affirmed; if it be affirmed only in part, etc." It appeared that the appeal was dismissed with costs for failure to serve the printed case and exceptions as required by a court rule. The court said: "There can be no question but that this was an effectual dismissal of the appeal within the terms of the undertaking." So in Clark v. Miles, 2 Pin. (Wis.) 432, 2 Chand. 94, wherein it appeared that an appeal was dismissed for the want of an affidavit, required by statute, the court held that the surety was liable on a bond conditioned for payment in case the appeal was dismissed or discontinued. In Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 388, 27 Pac. 296, sureties who failed to justify were held to be liable where the appeal was dismissed for that reason. The court said: "By their undertaking the defendants promised and agreed that 'if the appeal be withdrawn or dismissed,' the appellant would pay the amount of the judgment so appealed from. This was an original and independent agreement on their part . . . and in legal effect was entered into by them with the plaintiff. By virtue of the provisions of section 979 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the filing of the undertaking staying proceedings, all proceedings under the execution are to be stayed; and it was shown at the trial that upon the making and filing of said undertaking the property levied upon under an execution upon the judgment was released. The consideration recited in the undertaking was the 'staying of the execution of the judgment appealed from.' As soon as this undertaking was filed, it became an executed obligation on their part, and whenever the contingency upon which the obligation was to depend arose, their liability became fixed. This liability could not thereafter be defeated by any act or omission on their part, or on the part of their principal. Their agreement to be found in case the appeal should be dismissed extended as well to a dismissal resulting from their failure to justify as to a dismissal resulting from a failure on the part of their principal to prosecute the appeal." In Adams v. Billingsley, 107 Ark. 38, 153 S. W. 1105, it was held that a complaint which alleged the obtaining of a judgment, the execution of a supersedeas bond conditioned to pay the judgment if an appeal therefrom was dismissed, and the dismissal of the appeal, stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the obligors on the bond. But in Bosley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 457, it was held that the surety on an appeal bond was not liable for the judgment, the court saying: "The term 'dismiss' was not originally applied to common law proceedings, but seems to have been borrowed from proceedings in the court of chancery, where in practice the term is applied to the removal of a cause out of court, without any further hearing. . . . The term when used is applied to the removal or disposal of the cause itself, and not to the mere abatement of the writ. Such we conceive to have been the sense in which the parties to this bond used the word 'dismissal.' And in our opinion, the condition of the bond to pay the judgment, etc., if the writ of error should be 'dismissed,' has not been broken by a refusal to pay on the judgment of the court 'quashing' the writ."

Dismissal by Consent.

A dismissal of an appeal by consent imposes no liability on the sureties on the appeal bond. Thus in Tournillon v. Ratcliff, 20 La. Ann. 179, it was held that the consent of the appellee to the dismissal of the appeal released the security of the appeal bond. The court said: "It is a well-settled rule of law, that all laws governing certain contracts, make part of such contracts. . . . Following that rule, it was impliedly understood and agreed between the parties to the bond of appeal, including the appellee, as a kind of proviso, that after the Supreme Court had jurisdiction of the case, the appellant would not be bound to prosecute his appeal, and would be allowed to withdraw it, if he obtained the consent, to that effect, of the appellee; this having been done accordingly, the appellant was not bound to prosecute his appeal, and he was released from that penal obligation by the appellee, who cannot now, with good grace, say to the surety: Your principal has broken the condition of the bond by not prosecuting his appeal, and you must pay me the penalty. The surety can reply successfully: You have by your own act and consent, dispensed and relieved the principal obligor from that prosecution under the understanding in the bond." So in Lesard v. Gibson, 6 Ill. App. 503, it appeared that the plaintiff and the defendant, pending an appeal, entered into an agreement for the payment of a certain sum by installments in satisfaction of the judgment appealed from, without the knowledge or consent of the sureties. Thereafter, the appeal was dismissed in pursuance of that agreement, and the court held that the sureties were not liable on their bond although the appellant failed to make the payments as agreed.

HAILE

135 La. 229.

NEW ORLEANS RAILWAY AND LIGHT COMPANY.

Louisiana Supreme Court—May 11, 1914.

135 La. 229; 45 So. 225.

Carriers of Passengers — Insulting
Language to Passenger.

Objectionable remarks, addressed by a street car conductor to a patron of the road, referring to her personal appearance, while on the car, which mortify and humiliate her, are actionable, and the car company will be held in damages therefor. Lamson v. Great Northern Ry. Co. 114 Minn. 182, 130 N. W. 945, Ann. Cas. 1914A 15.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from Civil District Court, Parish of Orleans: SKINNER, Judge.

Action for damages. Mrs. A. Virginia Haile, plaintiff, and New Orleans Railway and Light Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. Affirmed.

Hall, Monroé & Lemant for appellant.

Woodville & Woodville for appellee.

[230] SOMMERVILLE, J.—Plaintiff, a passenger on one of defendant's cars, fell while the car was making a curve at the intersection of two streets in New Orleans, and she was injured to a certain extent. She also alleges that she was humiliated and mortified by the actions of the conductor on the car, for all of which she asks pecuniary damages.

There was a verdict and judgment for $500 against defendant, and it has appealed.

The testimony fails to disclose any fault on the part of defendant, for the accident to plaintiff. The tracks and rolling stock of defendant were not shown to be in poor condition, and it does not appear that the speed of the car was at an unusual rate in making the curve around the corner referred to. Defendant used proper precautions in operating the car at the time of the accident; and it cannot be held in damages for an accident in a curve which it was required to make, and which accident occurred without its fault.

Ann. Cas. 1916C,—78.

The humiliation and mortification of which plaintiff complains were caused by the conductor while she was in the act of alighting from the car. He referred to her as "a big [231] fat woman," and he assumed to reprimand her for sitting where she had been seated in the car. Plaintiff testifies that the conductor said to her:

"You had no business sitting in front of the car—a big fat woman like you had no business sitting in front of the car. Why didn't you sit in the back?"

The conductor was absent from New Orleans at the time of the trial, and a statement made by him was admitted in evidence by consent of plaintiff, so as not to delay the trial of the cause. He was not therefore subjected to cross-examination. The conductor states that he told plaintiff "that a stout person like herself ought to seat herself at the rear end of the car."

The statements of plaintiff and the conductor show that the latter used language to plaintiff which was disrespectful and humiliating to her. The personal appearance of a patron of a street car is not a proper subject of comment by the employees of the defendant company. Neither should the conductor undertake to dictate to a passenger as to where she should sit in a car which has no reserved seats.

The language used by defendant's employee was humiliating and mortifying to a sensitive woman, and defendant did not give to plaintiff that care and respectful consideration and attention which it, as a common carrier, owed her while she was using its car, and it is responsible in damages for the annoyance and injured feelings caused to plaintiff through the fault of its employee. Lamson v. Great Northern R. Co. 114 Minn. 182, 130 N. W. 945, Ann. Cas. 1914A 15.

It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment appealed from be amended by reducing it to $250, and, as thus amended, it is affirmed.

NOTE.

The act of a street railway conductor in referring to a passenger as "a big fat woman" is held in the reported case to give a right of action against the company. The earlier cases discussing the liability of a carrier of passengers for rude and insulting language by an employee are reviewed in the note to Lamson v. Great Northern R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1914A 15.

MAHONEY LAND COMPANY

CAYUGA INVESTMENT COMPANY.

Washington Supreme Court—December 11, 1915.

88 Wash. 529; 153 Pac. 308.

Nuisances — Estoppel to Object — Consent to Structure.

Where the owner of apartment houses consented to and encouraged the construction of private garages in the rear of such buildings, securing the preference for his tenants, he cannot subsequently seek an injunction on the ground that the noises and smells from such garages prove a nuisance by reason of the residential nature of the neighborhood.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Superior Court, King county: RONALD, Judge.

Action for injunction. Mahoney Land Company, plaintiff, and Cayuga Investment Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Peterson & Macbride for appellant.

Robt. F. Booth and G. B. O'Harra for respondent.

[529] BAUSMAN, J.—Action by Mahoney Land Company against Cayuga Investment Company, to restrain the operation of certain private garages erected by the Investment Company on its own land across an alley from the Mahoney Company's high-class apartment house. The lower court permanently enjoined the use of these garages, and allowed $750 damages as well.

Noises and smells from these garages have undoubtedly proved a great annoyance to tenants in at least so much of the apartment house as faces the alley. On the other hand, it is neither alleged nor proved that these garages are used in an unusually noisy or disorderly way. In other words, negligence is lacking. The argument of plaintiff consequently must be that they were a nuisance in themselves.

If this were the only point, we should be obliged again to enter into the perplexing question of when an otherwise lawful [530] occupation or enjoyment of property becomes a nuisance by reason of its being in a location prejudicial to other modes of life, or to more refined employments, and to repose. But this we are spared here by another point, which to our minds, is decisive.

It appears that, before the Cayuga Company ran up any of these garages, it discussed the project favorably with the Mahoney Company's manager. Indeed, the latter contributed toward the enterprise by agreeing himself to store an automobile there, and by advancing the Cayuga Company several months' rent. He even arranged that his tenants should have a preference in the use of these garages. Nothing, in short, is plainer than that, at the outset, this manager believed these garages would be useful to his own customers, and this suit was brought more than a year afterwards.

Plaintiff contends, though, that he consented only to the first five, and his grievance seems to date from the building of eight others, additional and adjacent. But even against these he did not at first absolutely protest. He certainly acquiesced in their being run up, for, to please him, a change was made in their height so that their roofs should not obstruct his tenants' view. What he then said was: "The thing that might prove a nuisance to me was that he shut off the views from all the windows of the main floor."

What shall be said of the law if it permits me to encourage my neighbor to run up structures on his land, and then to complain of them when they are used just in the way that might have been expected? Am I to encourage him to spend his money and then, simply because the completed thing turns out to be more annoying than I had reckoned, to tell him either to shut them up or let them rot? Suppose the owner of this apartment house had found it a good thing for his tenants to have the Cayuga Company build a cafe there. Should he get an injunction when the smells and noises of [531] the kitchen, kept as other kitchens are, proved disagreeable to them? This would be an intolerable shifting, yet it is practically what is done here, where there is no claim that these garages are being conducted in a manner different from what a reasonable man might have foreseen. In fine, the grievance of the Mahoney Company is not that the Cayuga Company built garages against its consent, but that, building garages with its encouragement and acquiescence, they have proved disagreeable. The direct encouragement and acquiescence shown here as to an alleged private nuisance is fatal to equitable, as well as legal relief. Huntington, etc. Land Development Co. v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. 40 W. Va. 711, 21 S. E. 1037; Sprague v. Steere, 1 R. I. 247; Attorney-General v. New York, etc. R. Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 49; Fresno v. Fresno Canal, etc. Co. 98 Cal. 179, 32 Pac. 943; Buchanan v. Loganport, etc. R. Co. 71 Ind. 265. Volenti non fit injuria.

The judgment is reversed, and the case ordered dismissed.

Morris, C. J., Parker, Main, and Holcomb, JJ., concur.

NOTE.

Acquiescence in or Consent to Erection of Structure as Precluding Objection Thereto as Nuisance.

Scope of Note, 1235

Acquiescence, 1235

Consent or Procurement, 1236

Scope of Note.

This note does not treat of the effect of laches or acquiescence by a person injuriously affected by a nuisance after its character as such is manifest, but is confined to a discussion of the right of a person, who has consented to or acquiesced in the erection of a structure, thereafter to assert that it constitutes a nuisance.

Acquiescence.

Mere acquiescence by an adjoining owner in the erection of a lawful structure or failure to protest, by reason of injury which may be anticipated therefrom, does not preclude him from asserting that the existence or operation of the completed structure is a nuisance. Deweese v. Husmann, 146 Ill. App. 55; Pettis v. Johnson, 56 Ind. 139; Harley v. Merrill Brick Co. 83 Ia. 73, 48 N. W. 1000; Stephens v. Gardner Creamery Co. 9 Kan. App. 883 mem. 57 Pac. 1058; Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Walton (Ky.) 67 S. W. 988; Townsend v. Epstein, 93 Md. 537, 49 Atl. 629, 86 Am. St. Rep. 441, 52 L.R.A. 409; Matthews v. Stillwater Gas, etc. Co. 63 Minn. 403, 65 N. W. 947; Carter v. New York Elevated R. Co. 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 859; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 18 N. E. 88, 6 Am. St. Rep. 366, 1 L.R.A. 296; Cilly v. Cincinnati, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 344; 2 Cinc. L. Bul. 135; Barkau v. Knecht, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 66, 10 Cinc. L. Bul. 342; Hallock v. Suitor, 37 Ore. 9, 60 Pac. 384; Burt v. Smith, 3 Phila. 363, 16 Leg. Int. 132. Compare Attorney-General v. New York, etc. R. Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 49; Simpson v. Justice, 43 N. C. 115. In Harley v. Merrill Brick Co. supra, it was said: "The defendant pleaded as a defense that the plaintiff was estopped to recover in this action, for the reason that she knew that the works in controversy were to be constructed, but made no objection thereto, although she knew the purpose for which they were designed; but with that knowledge she permitted the defendant to construct the works at a large expense, and acquiesced therein. The appellant complains of the portion of the charge which relates to that defense, on the ground that it failed to state, as an element of the estoppel pleaded, that the conduct of the plaintiff must have induced the defendant to act in constructing its works. We think the complaint is well founded. There was evidence which tended to show that the defendant was not, in any manner influenced in what it did by the conduct of the plaintiff. There was nothing in her conduct from which acquiescence might have been inferred, unless from her silence. She claims that she objected to the construction of the works, and that her objections were made known through her husband. But if she did not so object there was nothing done or omitted, on her part which should estop her to recover, if the defendant was not induced to act upon what she did or omitted to do." So in Matthews v. Stillwater Gas, etc. Co. 63 Minn. 493, 65 N. W. 947, the court said: "It was not the construction of the plant, but the operation of it in the manner found by the court, which constitutes the nuisance. It was neither plaintiff's right nor duty to object to defendant's constructing a plant on its own premises. It was its own duty to see to it that when constructed the plant should not be so operated as to become a nuisance to others, and plaintiff had a right to assume that it would perform this duty. Plaintiff owed the defendant no duty to speak at that time, and a person is never estopped by his silence, except when it is his duty to speak. As soon as the plant was so operated as to become a nuisance to plaintiff, he did object, and has continued to object and remonstrated ever since." In Townsend v. Epstein, 93 Md. 537, 49 Atl. 629, 86 Am. St. Rep. 441, 52 L.R.A. 409, the rule was applied to a public nuisance working special injury to the plaintiff, the court saying: "The further contention on behalf of the appellee is that the appellants are estopped from maintaining their present suit because of acquiescence on their part in the erection of the structure now complained of or of laches in no sooner making known their objection to the same. This contention is based on the grounds: 1st. That there is evidence that Mr. Townsend one of the appellants when consulted by the appellee in regard to his plans which included the construction of the tunnel under and the structure across Garrett street gave his assent to the same and even encouraged the appellee to carry them forward; 2nd. That pending the proceedings for procuring the ordinance to authorize the carrying out of the plans of the appellee, the appellants did not appear to make any objection or offer any suggestion as to the same; 3rd. They stood by and saw the tunnel completed and the superstructure nearly so before making known the objections they now urge. In regard to the first of these grounds it may be sufficient to say that the evidence fails to clearly establish it. The appellee testified on his own behalf to the purport which has been indicated as to what said by Mr. Townsend when the appellee sought him in reference to his plans, etc. Mr. Townsend, however, denies that the conversation was as detailed by the appellee and gives quite a different version of it. Besides this, Mr. Townsend is only one of the appellants, and if the conversation occurred between him and the appellee, as the appellee states, there is no evidence that he communicated it to his co-appellants and co-owners with him of the abutting property which they occupied, and we may at least express a doubt whether an express acquiescence on his part in the plans of the appellee would bind his partners as respects the interests they had in the property. As to the second it is not perceived how the failure to object to an ordinance which we find to be invalid and inoperative could give the ordinance validity of effect or to authorize an act which with or without the ordinance was unlawful and a public nuisance. As to the third ground the appellants could not complain of injury to themselves until it was ascertained that injury would result to them from the acts of the appellee. They seem to have been prompt to act when that discovery was made. Until then they had only the right to object as members of the public and their failure to object in that capacity could not render a public nuisance lawful."

Consent or Procurement.

A person who actively encourages the erection of a structure is, by the weight of authority, estopped to assert that any use thereof which is reasonably to be expected constitutes a nuisance. Williams v. Jersey, Cr. & Ph. 91, 41 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 425; Heenan v. Dewar, 17 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 638; Fresno v. Fresno Canal, etc. Co. 98 Cal. 179, 32 Pac. 943; Irvine v. Oelwein, 170 Ia. 653, 150 N. W. 674; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576; Woodward v. West Side Mill, 43 Wash. 308, 86 Pac. 579. See also Sprague v. Steere, 1 R. I. 247. And see the reported case. In Huntington, etc. Land Development Co. v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. 40 W. Va. 711, 21 S. E. 1037, it appeared that the plaintiff, a land company, encouraged the location of a powder factory and sold to the defendant a site therefor. The court said: "Should the plaintiff, a speculative corporation, be permitted to induce various kinds of manufacturers to purchase of its lands, make great outlays in creating plants, and then because plaintiff ascertains that any such manufactory is an injury to the sale of others of its lands, is it to have the privilege of calling upon a court of equity to destroy the property and investment of those who have been induced to purchase of it in good faith, and without any attempt to deceive it as to the character of the manufactory to be established? Plaintiff says, 'I was mistaken.' Equity says: 'Make good the loss the defendant will incur, and you will be relieved of its obnoxious presence; otherwise you must bear it as a burden of your own assuming. At least, a court of equity will not lend you its assistance under such circumstances. If you would be heard, come with clean hands and a righteous cause.'" In Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Daugherty (Ky.) 36 S. W. 5, it was said: "It is also well settled that maintenance of dams in such way as to emit disagreeable or unwholesome odors affords a right of action to those who may be made sick or even inconvenienced. And this is true, however innocent of intentional wrong may be the party erecting the nuisance, or however needful the structure in his business. But here, in addition to the general issues presented by the answers, it is alleged, in paragraphs of the answers to which demurrers were sustained, that the company procured the ground for the purpose of constructing the pond as it was constructed, and confined the stream so as to make the pond complained of, with the consent of the appellee James Daugherty, and with full knowledge on his part of the company's purpose, and that he was active and influential in the negotiations resulting in the purchase of the ground where the pond was erected. It is therefore insisted by the company that, whether the appellees are estopped or not in maintaining these actions, the company was, at least, entitled to some notice from the complainants, before the institution of these suits, that the pond was offensive or obnoxious to them. And this we believe to be the law of the case." In Heenan v. Dewar, 17 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 638, it appeared that the plaintiff encouraged the defendant in his project; told him that it was the best thing he could do; that it was a money-making business; and that certain persons named and known to both, had made their first rise in that business. It was held that the plaintiff was estopped to assert that the structure was a nuisance. In Burkam v. Ohio, etc. R. Co. 122 Ind. 344, 23 N. E. 799, the court in applying the rule said: "The appellant seeks by his complaint the abatement of a nuisance by the removal of a railroad track from William street, in the city of Lawrenceburgh, and also to obtain an injunction and to recover damages. The trial court admitted evidence tending to prove that the appellant consented to the occupancy of the street, and assisted in making the fill upon which the track was laid. This evidence was clearly competent. An abutting owner who expressly consents to the occupancy of a street cannot afterwards ask a court to enjoin the use of the street or award him damages."

In like manner a structure cannot be complained of as a nuisance by a person who has licensed its construction. Ruthven v. Farmers' Co-operative Creamery Co. 140 Ia. 570, 118 N. W. 915. "It was a fraud in the plaintiff to attempt to make a private nuisance of that which was erected by his own license." Dorrance v. Simons, 2 Root (Conn.) 208.

But in Batchelder v. Sanborn, 24 N. H. 474, it appeared that "the plaintiff was present several times during the construction of the dam; worked for the defendant in making the repairs; knew that the dam when put in use would flow his land; that the intention was to keep up the water during the whole year; there was no evidence that he forbade the defendant to proceed with the work; and he said to third persons that the mill would be a benefit to the neighborhood, and urged the workmen to make the dam tight." It was held that he was not estopped. So in Pilcher v. Hurt, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 524, it was said of a nuisance consisting in an obstruction of navigation: "We do not think that the assent of the defendant to the erection of a nuisance in the river would take away his right to abate it afterwards if he thought proper."

In order that a person may be estopped by encouraging the erection of a structure to assert that its operation constitutes a nuisance, the consequences of which he complains must be such as should have been anticipated by him. Thus in Corley v. Lancaster, 81 Ky. 171, it was said: "Even assuming that it is sufficiently pleaded and proved that Corley did advise and consent to the building of the dam, still appellants are not estopped thereby, unless it be shown that he gave such advice and consent, knowing, or having reason to suppose, that the dam when erected would be a nuisance; the rule in such cases being that, in order to constitute an estoppel, the acts of the party affected by the nuisance must have been such as to make any attempt on his part to stop the nuisance, or recover damages therefrom, a positive fraud." So in Hudson v. Dengmore, 68 Ind. 391, the court said: "The case at bar is very similar, on the point under consideration, to the case of Bell v. Elliott, 55 Blackf. 113. That was an action of trespass on the case, by Elliott against Bell, for erecting a mill-dam upon his premises, which dam caused the land of Elliott to be overflowed. On the trial of the cause the circuit court had instructed the jury, that if they believed, from the evidence, that the plaintiff had made no objection to the erection of the dam, and had assisted in erecting it with a view to his own benefit, still, if they believed that the plaintiff did not know, or could not have foreseen, that the dam would cause his land to be overflowed, they could not presume a license from the circumstances stated. The correctness of this instruction, as a matter of law, was the question for the decision of this court, and the conclusion of the court was, that the instruction was unobjectionable. In delivering the opinion of the court, Blackford, J., said: 'If the plaintiff had given an express and legal license to the defendant to build the dam, that would have been, in effect a license to overflow the land; because such would have been the plain object of the license; and it could not have had any other object.' But the circumstance that the plaintiff did not object to the building of the dam, and assisted in building it, is no evidence of itself that he consented to waive any injury which the dam might afterward occasion to his land. If he had no knowledge that the dam would cause his land to be overflowed, his conduct can be readily accounted for, without supposing that he intended by it to give a license for the unforeseen injury. Unless he knew that the dam would cause an injury to his property, it was not his duty to object to it, nor could it be expected that he would do so.' The doctrine of the case cited is, we think, directly applicable to the question under consideration, in the case now before us. The appellee's conduct, as stated in the second paragraph of the answer, in that he stood by and, without objection, encouraged, advised, directed, assisted in and consented to the erection of the appellant's steam grist-mill and machinery, can be readily accounted for on other more rational hypotheses than that he thereby intended to license the appellant in the commission of unforeseen injuries and grievances to his property, himself and his family. It is certain, we think, that such a license, and authorizing the commission of the grievances and injuries complained of, could not be fairly implied, inferred or presumed from the appellee's said conduct in the premises, unless he knew and could have foreseen that such injuries and grievances would necessarily result from the erection and operation of the appellant's mill and machinery."

ALBERT PICK AND COMPANY

JORDAN.

California Supreme Court—December 15, 1914.

169 Cal. 1; 145 Pac. 506.

Courts — State Court Following Federal Decision.

A state court in deciding a federal question must conform to the latest decision of the federal Supreme Court thereon, though it necessitates the reversal of its own prior decisions.

[See Ann. Cas. 1913E 281.]

Taxation — Definition of Excise Tax.

An "excise tax" is an inland impost levied on articles of manufacture or sale and also on licenses to pursue trades or dealing in commodities, and is frequently denominated a privilege or occupation tax.

Foreign Corporations — Imposition of License Tax — Validity.

The taxes imposed by Pol. Code § 409, requiring the Secretary of State to charge and collect fees for filing articles of incorporation, graduated on the amount of the capital stock, and by St. 1906, p. 493, imposing an annual license tax on foreign corporations doing business in the state, are excise taxes, demanded as a privilege for the right to do a domestic business, and not taxes based on the capital stock but merely measured thereby, and the imposition of the taxes on a foreign corporation selling its merchandise in the state, though manufactured elsewhere, is not an interference with interstate commerce.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco: SEAWELL, Judge.

Petition for mandate. Albert Pick and Company, plaintiff, and Frank C. Jordan, Secretary of State, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSEN.

U. B. Webb, Raymond Benjamin and John H. Riordan for appellant.

McClellan & McClellan for respondent.

J. C. Campbell, David L. Levy and J. O. Campbell, Weaver, Shelton & Dery, Amici Curiae.

[2] HENSHAW, J.—Petitioner is a corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Illinois, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling and generally dealing in china, glassware, pottery, restaurant supplies, and other merchandise. It manufactures none of the enumerated articles in the state of California. However, as it avers, in its petition, it has for a long time been engaged in interstate commerce, in these goods, and wares between the state of Illinois, the state of California, and other states of the United States. It maintains a branch office and place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, and sells its goods, wares, and merchandise in the city and county of San Francisco and in other states of the United States, and ships its goods, wares, and merchandise from the state of Illinois into the state of California [3] and into other states, and from the state of California into other states. It has tendered to the secretary of state for filing a certified copy of its articles of incorporation with other appropriate papers required by the laws of the state, and the secretary of state has refused to file the same excepting upon prepayment of the fee fixed by section 416 of the Political Code (now 409, Pol. Code), and the fee prescribed by section 2 of the act relating to revenue and taxation providing for a license-tax on corporations. (Stats. 1905, p. 493.) Petitioner, refusing to pay the fees, made application to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for mandate against the secretary of state directing him to file these papers without payment of the fee exacted by the terms of subdivision 4 of section 409 above cited and the corporation license-tax of 1905.

The secretary of state answered, setting forth that the petitioner, besides the conduct of interstate commerce in which it is admittedly engaged, transacts "a large volume of intrastate business within the state of California; that said intrastate business forms no part of and is neither inextricably nor necessarily connected with the interstate business of said company, and respondent further alleges that its said interstate business is nowise dependent upon the aforesaid intrastate business of said company; that the authorized capital stock of said company amounts to one million dollars." A general demurrer to this answer was interposed and sustained, and the trial court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein it declared in accordance with the allegations of the petition and awarded the mandate prayed for. The secretary of state has appealed from this judgment.

Upon this appeal we are asked to distinguish this case from that of Mulford Co. v. Curry, 163 Cal. 276, 125 Pac. 236, where this court, in the matter of the exaction of taxes or fees upon corporations engaged in interstate commerce, sought (though perhaps in vain) to determine the underlying principles and to follow the rulings of the supreme court of the United States enunciated in that series of cases, beginning with Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 355, 20 S. Ct. 190. We are asked to do this because of the new light which it is said has been shed upon the legal questions involved by the cases of Baltic Min. Co. and S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. [4] Massachusetts, decided by the supreme court of the United States, and reported in 231 U. S. 68, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 127, 34 S. Ct. 15.

In Mulford Co. v. Curry this court expressed the reluctance it felt over the necessity of applying the principles of the Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas and the other like cases to the fiscal and revenue laws of the state. It did so under the compulsion of its oath to uphold the constitution and laws of the United States as expounded by its highest judicial tribunal. If we were in error in our understanding of the law, if the supreme court of the United States has latterly thrown new light upon its own exposition of the law, or if it has receded from any of the views which it has expressed in the earlier cases, it is for this court to remodel its own decisions in swift conformity therewith.

It becomes necessary, therefore, even at the peril of prolixity, to set forth the understanding which this court had, and which in Mulford Co. v. Curry, it expressed, of the legal principles enunciated and the legal controversies decided in that series of cases beginning with the Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas. By the law of Kansas every foreign corporation "seeking to do business in this state" was required to file a copy of its charter or of its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, and, when so filing, to "pay to the state treasurer of Kansas, for the benefit of the permanent school fund, a charter fee of one-tenth of one per cent. of its authorized capital upon the first $100,000 of its capital stock or any part thereof, and upon the next $100,000 or any part thereof one-twentieth of one per cent.; and for each million or major part thereof over and above the sum of $500,000, $200." The Western Union Telegraph Company, a New York corporation, was conducting business in the state of Kansas. That business was both interstate, involving the reception within the state of messages from points outside of the state, and, conversely, the sending of messages from points within the state to points outside the state, and intrastate or domestic, consisting of the sending and reception of messages between different points wholly within the state. It refused to make the filing and pay the fee prescribed by the Kansas statute, and the state brought its action in one of its own courts against the company, seeking to oust and restrain it from doing any domestic business within the state, such being one of the penalties by the laws of Kansas [5] prescribed. The state court rendered its decree of ouster and restraint as prayed for. The cause was transferred under writ of error to the supreme court of the United States, and there decided by a sharply divided court upon an elaborate opinion handed down by Mr. Justice Harlan. The Western Union Telegraph Company was capitalized for one hundred million dollars. The "charter fee" (such is the description of the fee used by the state of Kansas) in the case of the Western Union Telegraph Company amounted to twenty thousand one hundred dollars.

Amongst the contentions of the state of Kansas in support of the validity of the judgment of its court were that it had the absolute right to impose the terms and conditions upon which a foreign corporation might do a domestic business within its territorial limits; that the fiscal law under review imposed as such condition the payment of a charter fee based on or admeasured by the par value of the capital stock of corporations; that this was not a tax upon the property of the corporation either within or without the state, but was "a local police regulation on local business only;" that the fact that the statute might cause inconvenience to interstate business did not render it unconstitutional; and that the failure to comply with the law did not prevent the foreign corporation from continuing to the fullest extent in engaging in interstate commerce. The opposed contentions of plaintiff in error are set forth by the supreme court in the opening paragraph of the opinion which it rendered in that case. They are as follows:

"The contentions of the company, to which particular attention will be directed, are, in substance, that the requirement that it pay, for the benefit of the permanent school fund of the state, a given per cent. of its authorized capital, wherever and however employed, as a condition of its right to continue to do domestic business in Kansas, is a regulation which, by its necessary operation, directly burdens or embarrasses interstate commerce, and, therefore, is illegal under the commerce clause of the constitution; further, that such a requirement involves the taxation not only of the company's interstate business everywhere, but equally the property employed by it beyond the limits of the state, a thing which could not be done consistently with the due process of law enjoined by the fourteenth amendment."

[6] And, here, at the outset, it may be well to state that each and every one of these contentions is to the fullest extent sustained by the decision. It is to be remembered that the supreme court itself declares that these contentions are the ones to which particular attention will be directed. What the supreme court decides is, that without regard to the name by which the license, or fee, or excise, or impost, or occupation, or privilege tax may be called, when it takes the form that it took in Kansas, of an exacted payment of a given per cent. of the authorized capital stock, this exaction accomplishes two distinct illegal and unconstitutional results. First, it is in legal effect a tax upon all of the property represented by the capital stock of the corporation, therefore a tax upon such parts of the property as were engaged in interstate commerce, and therefore an invalid tax under the commerce clause of the constitution of the United States; and, second, it is an attempt by the state to tax property beyond its territorial jurisdiction, and is therefore confiscatory in nature and violative of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution. That there can be no possibility of misunderstanding the meaning of the supreme court in this particular we shall employ a few quotations from its decisions. But before doing so we will quote one sentence from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes in this particular case. Bearing in mind that the majority of the supreme court declared that the Kansas law imposed a tax, we note Justice Holmes in dissenting saying: "I assume that a state cannot tax a corporation on commerce carried on by it with another state, or on property outside the jurisdiction of the taxing state; and I assume further that for that reason a tax on or measured by the value of the total stock of a corporation like the Western Union Telegraph Company, is void." (Mr. Justice Holmes' argument proceeds upon the view that Kansas had not imposed a tax at all. "She simply has said to the company that if it wants to do local business it must pay a certain sum of money. . . . The whole matter is left in the Western Union's hands.") The prevailing opinion declared that there was no decision "holding that a state may by any device or in any way, whether by a license-tax in the form of a fee, or otherwise, burden the interstate business of a corporation of another state. . . . If the statute reasonably interpreted, either directly or by its necessary operation, burdens interstate commerce, it must be adjudged to [7] be invalid whatever may have been the purpose for which it was enacted, and although the company may do both an interstate and local business. This court has repeatedly adjudged that in all such matters the judiciary will not regard mere form, but will look through the form to the substance of things." Then says the court:

"Looking, then, at the natural and reasonable effect of the statute, disregarding mere forms of expression, it is clear that the making of the payment by the Telegraph Company, as a charter fee, of a given per cent. of its authorized capital, representing, as that capital clearly does, all of its business and property, both within and outside of the state, a condition of its right to do local business in Kansas, is, in its essence, not simply a tax for the privilege of doing local business in the state, but a burden and tax on the company's interstate business and on its property located or used outside of the state. The express words of the statute leave no doubt as to what is the basis on which the fee, specified in the state statute, rests. That fee, plainly, is not based on such of the company's capital stock as is represented in its local business and property in Kansas. The requirement is a given per cent. of the company's authorized capital, that is, all its capital wherever or however employed, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, and whatever may be the extent of its lines in Kansas as compared with its lines outside of that state. What part of the fee exacted is to be attributed to the company's domestic business in Kansas and what part to interstate business, the state has not chosen to ascertain and declare in the statute. It strikes at the company's entire business wherever conducted, and its property wherever located, and, in terms, makes it a condition, of the telegraph company's right to transact purely local business in Kansas that it shall contribute for the benefit of the state school fund a given per cent. of its whole authorized capital, representing all of its property and all its business and interests everywhere. . . . So, in the case now before us, the exaction as a condition of the privilege of continuing to do or doing local business in Kansas, that the Telegraph Company shall pay a given per cent. of its authorized capital stock, is, for every practical purpose, a tax both on the company's local business in Kansas, and on its interstate business or on the privilege of doing interstate business; for, the statute, by its necessary operation, will accomplish precisely [8] the result that would have been accomplished had it been made, in express words, a condition of doing local business that the Telegraph Company should submit to taxation upon both its interstate and intrastate business and upon its interests and property everywhere, as represented by its capital stock. The exaction made by the Kansas statute is as much a tax on the interstate business of the company and on its property outside of the state as a fee or tax on the sale of an article imported only for sale or as a tax on the occupation of an importer would be a tax on the property imported."

In the course of its argument and in demonstration that its reasoning was not meant to apply exclusively to that class of corporations known as common carriers, it uses this illustration: "If a domestic corporation engaged in the business of soliciting orders for goods manufactured, sold and delivered in a state, should, in addition, solicit orders for goods manufactured in and to be brought from another state for delivery, could the former state make it a condition of the right to engage in local business within its limits that the corporation pay a given per cent. of all fees or commissions received by it in its business, interstate and domestic? There can be but one answer to this question,—namely, that such a condition would operate as a direct burden on interstate commerce, and therefore would be unconstitutional and void. Consistently with the constitution no court could, by any form of decree, recognize or give effect to or enforce such a condition." And in announcing the familiar doctrine that Kansas might exact a license-tax of the corporation "strictly on account of local business done by it in that state," it couples this statement with the declaration: "But it is altogether a different thing for Kansas to deny it the privilege of doing such local business, beneficial to the public, except on condition that it shall first pay to the state a given per cent. of all its capital stock, representing all of its property, wherever situated, and all its business in and outside of the state." And the opinion concludes as follows: "The right of the Telegraph company to continue the transaction of local business in Kansas could not be made to depend upon its submission to a condition prescribed by that state, which was hostile both to the letter and spirit of the constitution. The company was not bound, under any circumstances, to surrender its constitutional exemption from state taxation, direct or indirect, in respect of its interstate business and its [9] property outside of the state, any more than it would have been bound to surrender any other right secured by the National Constitution."

The next case of Pullman Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 56, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 378, 30 S. Ct. 232, arose under the same Kansas statute. Mr. Justice Harlan again delivering the opinion. It reiterates and affirms the opinion and decision of the Western Union case, and defines that decision in terms, in the following language.

"The Charter Board, we have seen, gave it permission to engage in intrastate business in Kansas on condition that it should pay to the state treasurer for the benefit of the permanent school fund of the state, as a charter fee, the sum of $14,800, which is the prescribed statutory per cent. of the company's authorized capital, representing all of its property and interests everywhere, in and out of the state, and all its business, both interstate and intrastate. It does not appear how much of the single fee demanded by the state is to be referred to the interstate business of the company nor how much to its property outside of the state, nor what part has reference to its intrastate business or to its property within the state." "We hold (2) That the requirement that the company, as a condition of its right to do intrastate business in Kansas, should, in the form of a fee, pay to the state a specified per cent. of its authorized capital, was a violation of the constitution of the United States, in that such a single fee, based as it was on all the property, interests and business of the company, within and out of the state, was, in effect, a tax both on the interstate business of that company, and on its property outside of Kansas, and compelled the company, in order that it might do local business in Kansas in connection with its interstate business, to waive its constitutional exemption from state taxation on its interstate business and on its property outside of the state and contribute from its capital to the support of the public schools of Kansas."

Mr. Justice White filed a concurring opinion in that case, in which, while assenting to the views of his associates, he carried the doctrine further than they, declaring, with unimpeachable logic: "It is not by me doubted that as a practical question the arbitrary prohibition against doing a local business imposed on one engaged in and having the right to engage in interstate commerce is to burden that business." Epigrammatically, [10] he presents the controversy in the following sentences: "The only right here challenged is the authority of a state to impose an unconstitutional tax and validate the tax by making the payment of the unlawful tax a condition of the right to do a local business. And this upon the false assumption that absolute power to exclude exists; that is, to impose an unlawful tax and sustain it by another unlawful assumption of power, a process of reasoning which, to my mind, must rest on the proposition that in deciding questions of constitutional power it is to be held that two wrongs make a right." Mr. Justice Holmes again dissented, reiterating in amplified form the views expressed in his earlier dissent, and concluding: "I think that the tax in question, for I am perfectly willing to call it a tax, was lawful under all the decisions of this court until last week." (The italics are ours.)

The next case was Ludwig v. Western Union Tel. Co. 216 U. S. 146, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 423, 30 S. Ct. 280. This case had to do with an Arkansas law, which required all foreign corporations to file copies of their charters or articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, under heavy penalties for failure so to do, and required them also to pay into the treasury of the state, "for the filing of said articles a fee of $25 where the capital stock is $50,000 or under; $75 where the capital stock is over $50,000 and not more than $100,000, and $25 additional for each $100,000 of capital stock." The supreme court of the United States declared that the case could not "be distinguished in principle from Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas and Pullman Co. v. Kansas," and that the difference in the wording of the Kansas and Arkansas statutes—the former being in the nature of a percentage tax, the latter naming fixed sums of money based upon capitalization—did not differentiate the cases so as to take the Arkansas statute out of the ruling of the former cases. These cases were followed by Atchison, etc. R. Co. v. O'Connor,

223 U. S. 280, Ann. Cas. 1913C 1050, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 436, 32 S. St. 216. The statute of Colorado exacted a "fee" of a foreign corporation of two cents upon each $1000 of its capital stock, which fee it was declared was for the right to do a local business within the state. The action was brought to recover the tax paid under protest. Mr. Justice Holmes, who dissented in the earlier cases, delivering the opinion of the court, declared: "Therefore it is obvious that the tax is of the kind decided by [11] this court to be unconstitutional, since the decision below in the present case, even if the temporary forfeiture of the right to do business declared by the statute be confined by construction, as it seems to have been below, to business wholly within the state."

Again the question arose in International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 678, 30 S. Ct. 481. The International Textbook Company was a Pennsylvania corporation, organized for purposes of profit and with a capital stock. It combined the publication of textbooks and courses of instruction in various arts and sciences with an educational school conducted by correspondence, to the students of which it transmitted for a consideration these textbooks and educational courses. It employed salaried agents within specified territories to secure pupils or students. It did so in Kansas. It failed or refused to comply with certain provisions of the Kansas statute, one, the provision for the charter fee considered in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 355, 30 S. Ct. 190, and, another, the provision requiring it to file with the secretary of state a detailed statement showing the authorized capital, the paid-up capital stock, the amount of assets and liabilities, etc. etc. Among the penalties prescribed for a failure so to do was the denial of the right to the defaulting corporation to maintain an action in any of the courts of the state. The International Textbook Company sued Pigg as a debtor under one of its contracts of instruction. The supreme court of the United States reaffirmed the invalidity of the Kansas charter fee statute, and further declared: "It is the established doctrine of this court that a state may not, in any form or under any guise, directly burden the prosecution of interstate business. But such a burden is imposed when the corporation of another state, lawfully engaged in interstate commerce, is required, as a condition of its right to prosecute its business in Kansas, to make and file a statement setting forth certain facts which the state, confessedly, could not control by legislation. It results that the provision as to the statement mentioned in section 1283 must fall before the constitution of the United States, and with it—according to the established rules of statutory construction—must fall that part of the same section which provides that the obtaining of the certificate of the secretary of state that such statement has [12] been properly made shall be a condition precedent to the right of the plaintiff to maintain an action in the courts of Kansas."

And, finally, was decided Bucks Stove, etc. Co. v. Vickers, 226 U. S. 205, 57 U. S. (L. ed.) 189, 33 S. Ct. 41, where this purely manufacturing and mercantile corporation offended against the same Kansas law, and was held by the supreme court to be immune from punishment therefor, under authority of the Pigg case.

We have now considered all of the decisions of the supreme court of the United States (saving the Massachusetts cases hereinafter to be reviewed) which can have any bearing upon the questions before us. It becomes pertinent here to take up for brief analysis the case of H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry, 163 Cal. 276, 125 Pac. 236, wherein in this state the foregoing decisions of the supreme court first came under review. The more pertinent does it become to do this since the statutes in the present case under review are in all substantial particulars identically the same as they were when H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry was decided. A reference to H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry will save a repetition of the language of those statutes. It should be added that section 410 of our Civil Code declares that every foreign corporation which shall neglect or fail to comply with the conditions of sections 408 and 409 of the code shall be subject to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars, to be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general fund, and every such corporation so failing is denied the right to "maintain any suit or action in any of the courts of this state, or acquire or convey any legal title to any real property within the state, until it has complied with said section." This language is as general as language can be made. It is declared applicable to "every corporation organized under the laws of another state or territory or of a foreign country." Section 408 requires "every corporation organized under the laws of another state, territory, or of a foreign country, . . . file in the office of the secretary of state of the state of California a certified copy of its articles of incorporation," etc. The language of section 416 of the Political Code quoted in H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry has become by amendment the language of the present section 409 of the same code.

The Mulford Company, like the petitioner in the case at bar, was a commercial corporation organized to do, and doing, an interstate business, and an intrastate business within the state [13] of California. Like the present petitioner, it objected to the payment of the fees exacted by our laws, and after tendering certain nominal filing fees sought mandate against the secretary of state to compel him to receive and file certain documents, the filing of which was called for by our laws. That part of our laws to which the Mulford Company in especial objected was section 416 of the Political Code (now 409). This law, it will be noted (as did the Kansas statute), imposes a single fee upon corporations which it is made mandatory upon the secretary of state to collect for filing their articles of incorporation, the other sections referred to requiring that such articles be filed. In addition to this law, requiring foreign corporations to pay this fee before they can engage in business in the state of California at all, we have upon our books another law designated in its title as "A license-tax upon corporations," requiring them to pay an annual license-tax for the right to continue in business. (Stats. 1905, p. 493.) It was the first license law which this court had under especial consideration in the case of H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry. This may be noted from the declaration in the case where the annual license-fee law is set out, that it is set out as "having further relation to the matter." It was not important, to the decision in the Mulford Company case to elaborate our views upon these acts separately. The latter one was referred to: 1. Because it formed a part of the same fiscal system; 2. Because it, too, based its license fee charges upon the authorized capital stock of corporations, and 3. Because the practical effect in the case of every foreign corporation seeking to engage in business in the state of California was to require it to pay two fees. To illustrate, if the Western Union Telegraph Company had undertaken to engage in business in California, an analysis and computation will show that it would have been required to pay a fee of ten thousand dollars under sections 409 of the Civil Code and 416 of the Political Code, and a fee of two hundred and fifty dollars under the corporation License Tax Act, or a total of ten thousand two hundred and fifty dollars in California, as compared with twenty thousand one hundred dollars in Kansas.

Turning to the judgment in H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry, it will be found that the only judgment rendered is a declaration that the requirement of section 408 of the Civil Code, that the petitioner file its articles of incorporation, is a reasonable requirement, [14] but that the further requirement that as a condition of such filing the petitioner pay the fee exacted by section 409 of the Civil Code and 416 of the Political Code is illegal. Neither by the terms of the judgment nor by any express language in the opinion itself was the annual license-tax declared to be unconstitutional under the authority of the federal cases. But since the supreme court of the United States had declared that such fees, when based upon the total capital stock, were invalid exactions for the reasons given, the fear was felt and expressed that even the annual corporation license-tax so founded upon the total capital stock might fall under the same ban, and this court sought to advise the legislature as to what it conceived the supreme court of the United States had declared to be the limit of the law-making power in the matter.

What, then, did the supreme court of the United States decide in its cases?

It decided: (a) That it would review and consider the language of each state fiscal act and determine for itself, regardless of the determination of the states' legislative or judicial departments, what in fact the law did mean and what in fact it did accomplish, quoting with approval from Galveston, etc. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1031, 28 S. Ct. 638, to the following effect: "Neither the state courts, nor the legislatures, by giving the tax a particular name, or by the use of some form of words, can take away our duty to consider its nature and effect." (b) If under the interpretation of the supreme court it resulted that a particular statute "either directly or by its necessary operation burdens interstate commerce, it must be adjudged to be invalid, whatever may have been the purpose for which it was enacted, and although the company may do both interstate and local business." (c) If decided that interstate commerce was illegally burdened by a tax or fee directly on or based on the total capital stock of a corporation which, though engaged in local business within a state, was also engaged in interstate commerce. Thus we find the court in Pullman Co. v. Kansas, saying that "the requirement that the company, as a condition of its right to do intrastate business in Kansas, should, in the form of a fee, pay to the state a specified per cent. of its authorized capital, was a violation of the constitution of the United States, in that such a single fee, based as it was on all the property interests and business [15] of the company within and without the state, was in effect a tax both on the interstate business of that company and on its property outside of Kansas." Again, we find Mr. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion "assuming" and conceding that "a tax or measured by the value of the total stock of a corporation like the Western Union Telegraph Company is void." And again we have him declaring in his dissenting opinion in the Pullman case; "I think that the tax in question (for I am perfectly willing to call it a tax) was lawful."

(d) We find that the unconstitutionality and illegality of the tax so based and levied are declared to exist upon two separate and wholly unrelated grounds, which grounds are enunciated and re-enunciated time and again. Those grounds may be thus stated: The requirement to pay a given per cent. of the capital stock as a prerequisite of the right to do a local business, exacts burdensome and unconstitutional conditions from the corporation; the first, that the state thus taxes the instrumentalities and properties used in interstate commerce which lie without the taxing power of the state, and thus unduly burdens interstate commerce in violation of the commerce clause of the constitution; and, second, that such an act in taxing property without the jurisdiction of the taxing power requires a corporation seeking to do local business within a state to waive its constitutional right of exemption from taxation on its property lying outside of the state. (e) These results are declared to follow from the act of taxing the whole capital stock of such a corporation and are nowhere and nowise declared to be dependent either upon the amount of the capitalization of the corporation, nor upon the amount of the tax exacted from that corporation. We perceived, or thought we perceived, the ground for this in the principle that if the power to tax in a given way be conceded, the amount of the tax is vested wholly in the discretion of the taxing power, and we had in mind only the language of Chief Justice Marshall "that the power to tax involves the power to destroy." (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 14 U. S. (L. ed.) 579), but also the language of Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 719, 14 S. Ct. 829, quoted with approval in the Western Union case, in reference to such license-taxes, that "if a state may lawfully exact it, it may increase the amount of the exaction until all interstate commerce in this mode ceases to be possible."

(f) That [16] in thus guarding interstate commerce from unlawful interference, the supreme court would be governed not by what a given charge was or was called, but by consideration of what in its operation was its effect upon such commerce. For we find in the Western Union Telegraph case the following language quoted with approval from Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 773, 14 S. Ct. 865: "Whether this charge be viewed as a tax, a license or a fee, if its exaction violated the interstate commerce clause of the constitution of the United States, or involved the assertion of the right of a state to exercise its powers of taxation beyond its geographical limits, it was void, whatever might be the technical character affixed to the exaction." (g) We believed that the supreme court meant and declared for the indicated reasons that the method of charging a fee upon foreign corporations for the right to do a local business on or based on the capital stock of such corporations was forever inhibited, the supreme court saying, "There are sufficient modes in which the internal business, if not already taxed in some other way, may be subjected to taxation without the imposition of a tax which covers the entire operations of the company." (Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 U. S. (L. ed.) 311, 8 S. Ct. 1383.) And to the declaration of Mr. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion to the following effect: "If after this decision the state of Kansas, without giving any reason, sees fit simply to prohibit the Western Union Telegraph Company from doing any more local business there, or from doing local business until it has paid $20,100, I shall be curious to see upon what ground that legislation will be assailed," we believed that the answer would be, as above indicated, that it was not the amount of the charge which determined the invalidity, but the fact that in its form the charge was laid upon property without the taxing power of the state, and that to submit to the payment of it in such a form (that is, a tax on all the capital stock) would be to force the surrender upon the part of the corporations of their well-defined constitutional rights. Thus, if a man who is on his way to church to give a hundred dollars to charity is robbed of that hundred dollars by a highwayman, his financial condition is exactly the same as it would have been had he carried out his purpose. Yet it will not be said that this fact leaves him uninjured and without grievance.

[17] These, then, were some of the conclusions which we drew from the decisions of the supreme court and which, with more or less completeness, we sought to declare in H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry. One part of the judgment of the supreme court we conceived to be apodictic and that was that all the capital stock of such a corporation could not be subjected to any tax without doing violence to the constitution of the United States, and it was under this conviction that we sought in H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry to enlighten our legislative department as to the danger which would attach to all laws basing license fees of a foreign corporation on this method of taxation.

There arose in Massachusetts two cases of similar import, Baltic Min. Co. v. Com. 207 Mass. 381, 93 N. E. 831, and the S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Com. 212 Mass. 35, Ann. Cas. 1913C 805, 98 N. E. 1056. For convenience we may refer to but one and call that the Dental Company case. The Dental Manu- facturing Company was a Pennsylvania corporation, having no factories in Massachusetts, but engaged in domestic business within the state of Massachusetts, as well as in interstate commerce. The Massachusetts revenue laws provided that, "Every foreign corporation shall, in each year, at the time of filing its annual certificate of condition, pay to the treasurer and receiver general, for the use of the commonwealth, an excise tax, to be assessed by the tax commissioner, of one-fiftieth of one per cent. of the par value of its authorized capital stock as stated in its annual certificate of condition; but the amount of such excise tax shall not in any one year exceed the sum of $2000." The Dental Manufacturing Company objected to the payment of the tax upon the three grounds so clearly enunciated in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas. Those grounds, as stated by the supreme court of the United States, to which the case subsequently went on writ of error, being: "First, the tax is a regulation of interstate commerce, in that it imposes a direct burden upon that portion of the business and capital of the plaintiffs, in error which is devoted to interstate commerce; second, the tax is in violation of the due process of law clause, because it attempts to impose taxes upon property beyond the jurisdiction of the commonwealth of Massachusetts; and, third, the tax denies to the plaintiffs in error the equal protection of the law." [18] The supreme court of Massachusetts, after a painstaking review of its taxation history, its peculiar system of taxation and the decisions of its courts, held the tax to be a pure excise tax, "excise tax" as thus employed meaning a privilege tax upon the right to pursue an occupation, and not a tax upon property at all. It declared that it recognized that the supreme court of the United States would look through the form to the substance and determine for itself whether such an impost was or was not a property tax or a burden upon interstate commerce, and to this point cited the decisions of the supreme court which we have been considering. But it declared that there were "at least two important and, as we think, vital distinctions between these cases and the one at bar." The first of those distinctions is declared to be the fact that in the cases before the supreme court of the United States the corporations, though one and all engaged in domestic commerce, were common carriers, organized for the transportation of intelligence, commerce, and persons between the states, and that their local business could not be given up without impairing their capacity to transact their interstate business. And the second distinction was that the maximum fee allowed by the Massachusetts statute was two thousand dollars, while in the Kansas and Arkansas statutes the tax was graded and increased by the amount of the capital stock, and to the mind of the supreme court of Massachusetts "this provision demonstrates that it is not a property tax but only an excise, so limited that it cannot reach beyond a reasonable license fee." Further, the supreme court of Massachusetts points out that a flat rate of two thousand dollars might have been exacted of all corporations without doing violence to any right guaranteed by the constitution of the United States, and that in fact what Massachusetts has done has been to diminish the burden upon corporations of smaller capitalization. Again, the Massachusetts court denotes, as a compelling reason for its determination, that the authorized capital stock of the Dental Company is a million dollars, while its assets aggregate $5,711,718.29, thus to its mind evidencing the fact that the tax was an excise and not a property tax on or based on its authorized capital stock. And, lastly, the supreme court of Massachusetts decided that the act did not apply to common carriers, railroad, telegraph, and telephone, which were taxed upon another plan; that it did not apply [19] to corporations whose sole business within the state was interstate commerce, nor yet to corporations carrying on both interstate and domestic commerce, whose domestic or intrastate business was conducted in such close connection with the other that it could not be abandoned without serious impairment of the interstate business. It held that the Dental Company's intrastate business was severably distinct from its interstate business, and that therefore it was liable to the payment of this excise tax for the privilege of carrying on that intrastate business.

These cases, Baltic Min. Co. and S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 68 U. S. (L. ed.) 127, 34 S. Ct. 15), as has been said, went to the supreme court of the United States, and in an opinion handed down by Mr. Justice Day, the judgment of the supreme court of Massachusetts, upholding the validity of its foreign corporation license-tax law and the liability of the Dental Company to pay this tax, was sustained, Chief Justice White, Mr. Justice Van Devanter and Mr. Justice Pitney dissenting. The ground of their dissent has not been stated, but we think it beyond peradventure that, looking through form to substance, they believed this Massachusetts tax, call it excise or what you will, was in fact a tax upon the total capital stock of the dental corporation and thus was a tax within the inhibition declared in the Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas and the other like cases.

The supreme court of the United States adopts without reservation the determination of the supreme court of Massachusetts that this fee is an excise tax as distinguished from a property tax. It may at once be granted that it is that form of an excise tax which is frequently denominated a privilege or occupation tax, but it by no means follows that being an excise tax this is conclusive that it is not levied upon property. Indeed, many forms of excise tax are distinctly and admittedly levied upon property, and every definition of excise includes this kind of tax. An excise is "an inland impost levied upon articles of manufacture or sale and also upon licenses to pursue certain trades or dealing in certain commodities." (Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 617, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 713, 22 S. Ct. 496.) To say that because a tax is an excise it is not levied upon property is to throw all the reasoning of the supreme court in all these cases to the four winds. [20] The argument was made in these Kansas cases, and it was a sound argument, that the laws under consideration merely imposed an occupation or privilege tax—in short an excise tax—for the right to do a local business, and this was conceded by all of the justices of the supreme court. Their answer, however, to the conclusion sought to be drawn from this was that, notwithstanding that it is an excise tax or privilege or occupation tax, it is levied upon property beyond the taxing power of the state, and by the fact that it is so levied imposes a burden upon property without the state which is engaged in interstate commerce. We are unable to perceive, therefore, how the determination that the Massachusetts tax is an excise tax relieves it from the condemnation imposed upon the Kansas statute for attempting to do the same thing by fixing or basing its tax on the total capital stock of the corporation. As little do we perceive that the amount of the tax imposed by the Massachusetts law has materiality in the consideration. If the principle upon which its tax is based is a sound one, it may to-morrow increase the amount of the tax to any extent. It is true that in the earlier cases the corporations involved were common carriers and the supreme court of the United States makes mention of that fact in the Dental case, but it does not say that this consideration influenced or was determinative of the controversy. To the contrary, it does say that all corporations engaged in interstate commerce are under the equal protection of the commerce clause of the constitution, and, indeed, no distinction between them can justly be drawn. If it is important that common carriers—the instrumentalities by and through which commerce is conveyed, shall be protected from unwarranted burdens, it is equally necessary that the owners of the commerce to be conveyed should receive a like protection. While interstate commerce would unquestionably be vitally impaired if common carriers were eliminated, interstate commerce would be totally destroyed if the goods, wares, and merchandise embraced within the meaning of the word were debarred from interstate and foreign transportation. The supreme court of the United States points out very truly that in the Western Union Telegraph Company case and in the Pullman case, "there was no attempt to separate the intrastate business from the interstate business." No such attempt is made by the Massachusetts law. True, the Massachusetts supreme [21] court, under a stipulation of facts, finds that about five per cent. of the business of the Dental Company was intrastate. But there is no attempt in the law to impose any tax upon that part of its business nor upon the one hundred thousand dollars' worth of property which represents the company's holdings in the state. It would have been just as easy and as practicable to have shown in the Western Union Telegraph Company case the proportion of its local business as compared with its interstate business, and, indeed, in the case of every common carrier or commercial concern, we venture the assertion that not the slightest difficulty will be found in so doing. Indeed, we may recall the fact that this is required to be done in this state as a part of its revenue laws in the case of every common carrier engaged in interstate as well as intrastate business, and we have yet to hear of the first complaint touching the difficulty or impracticability of so doing. True it is that in the case of most, and we may say all, common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, the deprivation of local business is an injury and impairment of their business as a whole. But this is equally true of every commercial corporation likewise engaged in interstate and domestic business. Nor have we yet been told, nor are we told by this last decision of the supreme court, that this is a fundamental ground for destroying a state privilege tax otherwise constitutional. True, also, it is that in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, it is said that, "We cannot fail to recognize the intimate connection which at this date exists between the interstate business done by interstate companies and the local business which for the convenience of the people must be done, or can generally be better and more economically done, by such interstate companies rather than by domestic companies organized to conduct only local business." But in that same connection it is said that "It is of the last importance that the freedom of interstate commerce shall not be trammelled or burdened by local regulations, which, under the guise of regulating local affairs, really burden rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States." But as a state may absolutely exclude even a common carrier from doing a local business within its territory, and as this has been distinctly and in terms held in Osborn v. Florida, 164 U. S. 650, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 586, 17 S. Ct. 214, and Pullman Co. v. Adams, 189 U. S. 420, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 877, 23 S. Ct. [22] 494, where in the prevailing opinion in the Western Union Telegraph Company case it is said, referring to these two cases, both dealing with common carriers, "The company cannot complain of being taxed for the privilege of doing a local business which it is free to renounce," and as, in even stronger language the same principle is declared in Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305 [36 U. S. (L. ed.) 164, 12 S. Ct. 403], it is not permissible for us to hold that the mere interference with or deprivation of local business by a state statute not in itself otherwise unconstitutional, becomes unconstitutional for its indirect influence on the interstate business of the company affected. As little are we able to perceive that the accidental fact that the White Dental Company's capital stock is one million dollars, while its total assets aggregate five million, seven hundred and eleven thousand dollars, has any determinative value in this consideration. If a corporation called upon to pay a tax of one-fiftieth of one per cent. of its total capital stock, has assets amounting to five times the par value of its total capital stock, the tax amounts to one-two hundred and fiftieth of one per cent. upon its total assets. If other corporation, however, capitalized for the same amount has assets to the value of only one-fifth of its capital stock, it results that the property of that corporation is taxed one-tenth of one per cent. So the burden is the heavier upon the poorer corporation. And in neither of the Massachusetts cases is there any attempt to segregate and impose the tax upon that portion of the property or that portion of the whole business lying within or done within the state imposing the tax. Or, again, if we consider the Kansas law in connection with the Massachusetts law, it is indisputable that both levy a per centum tax in terms upon the total capital stock. An important difference in favor of the Kansas law is that when this charge is once paid, the privilege of engaging in domestic business is continuously and indefinitely assured. It is one single occupation tax. In Massachusetts, however, it is an annual burden year by year. The corporation annually must pay the per centum for the renewed right to continue in business. In Kansas a corporation with a capital stock of two million five hundred thousand dollars would pay a single tax of seven hundred dollars. In Massachusetts that same corporation would pay annually a tax of five hundred dollars. It is certainly reasonable to suppose [23] that corporations engaging in interstate and domestic commerce desire to continue their local business for more than one year. In two years the Massachusetts tax upon this corporation would exceed the Kansas charge. So while the supreme court of the United States does not follow the reasoning advanced by the supreme court of Massachusetts, which the latter court held to differentiate its revenue law from that considered in the Kansas and other cases, it does in its recitals state many of the facts which the supreme court of Massachusetts considered to have a determinative bearing upon the question, some of which we have just now ourselves been considering. What the supreme court of the United States does say is to reannounce the familiar proposition that every case, involving the validity of a tax must be decided upon its own facts, and at the conclusion of this recital to declare as follows: "The conclusion, therefore, that the authorized capital is only used as the measure of a tax, in itself lawful, without the necessary effect of burdening interstate commerce, brings the legislation within the authority of the state. So, if the tax is, as we hold it to be, levied upon a legitimate subject of such taxation, it is not void because imposed upon property beyond the state's jurisdiction, for the property itself is not taxed. In so far as it is represented in the authorized capital stock, it is used only as a measure of taxation, and, as we have seen, such measure may be found in property or in the receipts from property not in themselves taxable." If we analyze this language correctly, it is a declaration that if a state imposes a privilege tax upon the right of a foreign corporation to engage in strictly domestic business within that state (thus we construe the language "the tax levied upon a legitimate subject of such taxation") "this tax is not void because it is imposed (levied or assessed) upon property beyond the state's jurisdiction" for the reason that "the property itself is not taxed. The authorized capital stock is used only as a measure of taxation." Still further paraphrasing this language, we are unable to perceive that it means anything other than if a state desires to impose an occupation tax upon a foreign corporation for the right to do a strictly domestic business within its limits, it may impose this license tax upon the capital stock of the corporation, because, notwithstanding that the tax is imposed upon the capital stock and thus upon property beyond the state's jurisdiction, the [24] supreme court of the United States will hold that the tax is valid, because it will say that in the last analysis the property itself is not taxed, but that the capital stock is used only as a "measure of taxation." Again we fail to perceive how every word of this might not equally well have been said in the Western Union Tele- graph Company case, thus forcing the irresistible conclusion that the supreme court has receded from the position which it took, and has abandoned the views which it expressed in that and the like cases. But again, unfortunately, we are confronted in the same opinion with the declaration of the court that it has "no disposition to limit the authority of those cases." We are constrained to admit our inability to harmonize this language and these decisions, though we make haste to add that undoubtedly the failure must come from our own deficient powers of perception and ratiocination, and for this deficiency it is no consolation to us to note that our brethren of the supreme court of Montana are similarly afflicted, for they, too, declare (State ex rel. v. Alderson, 49 Mont. 29, 140 Pac. 82): "We are unable to appreciate the distinction attempted to be made by the supreme court of the United States between the Kansas statute considered in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, and held to impose a general tax upon all the property of the company, and the statute of Massachusetts considered in Baltic Min. Co. and S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 127, 34 S. Ct. 15, and held to be a mere excise."

We have said here, as well as in H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry, that we sought to arrive at, and thought we had arrived at, the fundamental and governing principle of the decisions, which was that to tax the total capital stock of a corporation for the indicated purposes compelled the corporation paying the tax to submit to two unconstitutional burdens, and that while in dollars and cents the same charge might be imposed upon the corporation, this particular form of tax could not be permitted. It is apparent from the last decision of the supreme court that in some forms it is permitted, and only the supreme court of the United States can say what are the permitted forms. We have reached the point where, if it be said that the state occupation or privilege charge be an excise tax (and every one of them of necessity must be excise taxes) then it is not a property tax. And even if it be in terms a percentage tax [25] upon the capital stock of a corporation, if it be said that this is not a tax on the capital stock, but that the capital stock and per centum are taken as constituting merely a convenient measuring rod for fixing the tax, then the property is not taxed, and all constitutional objections are obviated.

Since these questions greatly affect the revenues as well as the rights of the states, since the determination of each one of them is to rest upon its facts, and since, in the event of a decision adverse to a state by its own courts, the state, because of a most unfortunate hiatus in the law, is deprived of a right of a review of the question by the supreme court of the United States, we are moved in the present condition of the decisions to hold and we do hold, that as to both of the license fees in question their payment is exacted as a privilege or occupation tax exclusively upon the right to do a domestic business within the state of California; that these taxes are excise taxes and not property taxes, and that the tax is not on, nor based on, the capital stock of the corporation, but is merely admeasured by that capital stock; that in every case, and so in this case, it is practicable (for what it may be worth) to aggregate the strictly domestic business of a corporation from its interstate business; that the case of H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry should no longer be regarded as an authority; that the respondent in this case should pay the fees prescribed by our law; that the general demurrer sustained to defendant and appellant's answer in the trial court should not have been sustained; that the judgment rendered in favor of respondent in the trial court should be reversed and the relief accorded it denied. And in conclusion we may add that if again we are mistaken, it is comforting to know that the doors of the supreme court of the United States are open for the correction of our error.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Shaw, J., Melvin, J., Lorigan, J., Sloss, J., Angellotti, J., and Sullivan, C. J., concurred.
Rehearing denied.

NOTE.

Imposition of License Tax or Fee on Foreign Corporation.

Introductory, 1248
Corporation Doing Intrastate Business, 1249
Corporation Doing Interstate Business, 1249
Corporation Doing Interstate and Intrastate Business:
Tax Held Valid, 1249
Tax Held Invalid, 1253

Introductory.

The purpose of this note is to review the recent cases discussing the right to impose a license tax or fee on a foreign corporation. The earlier cases on the subject are collated in the notes to Atty.-Gen. v. Electric Storage Battery Co. 3 Ann. Cas. 631; S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Com. Ann. Cas. 1913C 805, and Hager v. Walker, 129 Am. St. Rep. 238, 288.

Corporation Doing Intrastate Business.

Since a state has the power to prescribe the conditions on which a foreign corporation may enter and do local business, it may impose on such a corporation a license tax or fee for the privilege of doing business within the state. Hirschfield v. McCullagh, 64 Ore. 502, 130 Pac. 1131. See also Dalton Adding Mach. Co. v. Virginia Corp. Commission, 236 U. S. 699, 35 S. Ct. 480, 69 U. S. (L. ed.) 797, affirming 213 Fed. 889; State v. Agey (N. C.) 88 S. E. 726.

It has been held that a foreign corporation is liable to taxation under a statute imposing a tax on persons and corporations selling sewing machines at places other than their regularly established places of business. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Atty.-Gen. of Alabama, 233 U. S. 304, 34 S. Ct. 493, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 974.

The power of a state to tax a foreign corporation is further discussed, and fully sustained as to intrastate business, in the cases dealing with the more complicated question of taxation of a corporation doing both intrastate and interstate business. See infra, the subdivision Corporation Doing Interstate and Intrastate Business.

Corporation Doing Interstate Business.

A foreign corporation cannot be compelled to pay a license tax or fee to a state for the privilege of carrying on interstate commerce. Sault Ste. Marie v. International Transit Co. 234 U. S. 333, 34 S. Ct. 826, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 1337, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 574, affirming 194 Fed. 522; Ewart Lumber Co. v. American Cement Plaster Co. 9 Ala. App. 152, 62 So. 560; Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Com. 218 Mass. 558, 106 N. E. 310; Dalton Adding Mach. Co. v. Com. (Va.) 88 S. E. 167.

The rule was applied in a case involving foreign commerce, Sault Ste. Marie v. International Transit Co. supra, wherein the court said: "The ordinance requires a municipal license; and the fundamental question is whether in the circumstances shown the state, or the city acting under its authority, may make its consent a condition precedent to the prosecution of the business. If the state, or the city, may make its consent necessary, it may withhold it. The appellee, having its domicile in Canada, is engaged in commerce between Canada and the United States. At the wharf which it leases for the purpose on the American shore, it receives and lands persons and property. Has the state of Michigan the right to make this commercial intercourse a matter of local privilege, to demand that it shall not be carried on without its permission, and to exact as the price of its consent—if it chooses to give it—the payment of a license fee? This question must be answered in the negative. . . . The fundamental principle involved has been applied by this court in recent decisions in a great variety of circumstances, and it must be taken to be firmly established that one otherwise enjoying full capacity for the purpose cannot be compelled to take out a local license for the mere privilege of carrying on interstate or foreign commerce."
Ann. Cas. 1916C.—79.

A statute imposing a tax on corporations doing business in the state will be construed by the state court so as not to apply to corporations doing only an interstate business within the state, since the last mentioned corporations cannot be subjected to state taxation. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Gifford, 25 Idaho 196, 136 Pac. 1131; State v. Alderson, 49 Mont. 29, 140 Pac. 82; Smith v. Dickinson, 81 Wash. 465, 142 Pac. 1133. And this rule applies to trading corporations as well as to those engaged in transportation. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Com. 218 Mass. 558, Ann. Cas. 1916C 214, 106 N. E. 310.

Corporation Doing Interstate and Intrastate Business.TAX HELD VALID.

A state may impose a license tax or fee on a foreign corporation engaging in both interstate and intrastate business, provided the tax or fee is imposed on the intrastate business and does not burden interstate business or tax property beyond the jurisdiction of the state. Baltic Min. Co. v. Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 34 S. Ct. 15, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 127 (affirming Baltic Min. Co. v. Com. 207 Mass. 381, 93 N. E. 831, and S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Com. 212 Mass. 35, Ann. Cas. 1913C 805, 98 N. E. 1056); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Frear, 216 Fed. 199; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Gifford, 25 Idaho 196, 136 Pac. 1131; State v. Sessions, 95 Kan. 272, 147 Pac. 789; Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Com. 218 Mass. 558, 106 N. E. 310; State v. Alderson, 49 Mont. 29, 140 Pac. 82; Atlas Powder Co. v. Goodloe, 131 Tenn. 490, 175 S. W. 547; General Ry. Signal Co. v. Com. (Va.) 87 S. E. 598; State v. Great Northern Exp. Co. 80 Wash. 305, 141 Pac. 757 (overruling 76 Wash. 636, 136 Pac. 1160), affirmed 81 Wash. 701, 143 Pac. 99 (privilege tax of five per cent. on gross receipts of intrastate business of express companies). See also Crane Co. v. Looney, 218 Fed. 260; New Orleans, etc. R. Co. v. State (Miss.) 70 So. 355; Dalton Adding Mach. Co. v. Com. (Va.) 88 S. E. 167. And see the reported case.

The general principles governing this question were stated in Baltic Min. Co. v. Massachusetts, supra, as follows, the statute involved being quoted in the reported case: "It is well settled and requires no review of the decisions of this court to that effect that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is supreme under the federal constitution and that the states may not burden such commerce, it being the purpose of the Constitution of the United States to bring commerce of this character under one supreme control and to vest the exercise of authority over it in the general government. It is equally well settled that forms of regulation prohibited to the state by the constitution may consist of efforts to tax the carrying on of such commerce and of attempted levies of taxes upon the receipts of interstate commerce as such.

While this is true, other equally well established principles must be borne in mind in considering the validity of a state tax attacked upon grounds of unconstitutionality. The mere fact that a corporation is engaged in interstate commerce does not exempt its property from state taxation. United States Exp. Co. v. Minnesota, 223 U. S. 335, 344 [32 S. Ct. 211, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 459, 465]. It is the commerce itself which must not be burdened by state exactions which interfere with the exclusive federal authority over it. A resort to the receipts of property or capital employed in part at least in interstate commerce, when such receipts or capital are not taxed as such but are taken as a mere measure of a tax of lawful authority within the state, has been sustained. . . . The right of a state to exclude a foreign corporation from its borders, so long as no principle of the federal constitution is violated in such exclusion, has been repeatedly recognized in the decisions of this court, and the right to prescribe conditions upon which a corporation of that character may continue to do business in the state, unless some contract right in favor of the corporation prevents or some constitutional right is denied in the exclusion of such corporation, is but the correlative of the power to exclude. . . . For example, a state may not say to a foreign corporation, you may do business within our borders if you permit your property to be taken without due process of law, or you may transact business in interstate commerce subject to the regulatory power of the state. To allow a state to exercise such authority would permit it to deprive of fundamental rights those entitled to the protection of the Constitution in every part of the Union. Having these general principles in mind, we will proceed to a consideration of the statute of Massachusetts directly involved in these cases. The supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in considering the character of the tax assessed under the statute of 1909 said (207 Massachusetts 388): "The required payment is strictly of an excise tax, and not of a tax upon property. . . . This excise tax is for the commodity or privilege of having an establishment for business in Massachusetts, with the protection of our laws and the financial and other advantages of a situation here." We have no fault to find with the conclusion that this is an excise tax. See also Provident Institution v. Massachusetts [6 Wall. 611, 18 U. S. (L. ed.) 907] supra; Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, supra, in which this court had occasion to consider the taxing system of Massachusetts. That the state may impose a tax upon a corporation, foreign or domestic, for the privilege of doing business within its borders is undoubted, and such has long been the legislative policy of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, as appears from the history of legislation set forth in the opinions in the cases last cited. Construing the act in question, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts has held that it does not apply to corporations engaged in railroad, telegraph, telephone, etc., business which are taxed on another plan under the provisions of the statute. It is held not to apply to corporations whose business is interstate commerce or who carry on interstate and intrastate business in such close connection that the intrastate business cannot be abandoned without serious impairment of the interstate business of the corporation. And the statute, it is held, does not apply to corporations which have places of business for the transaction solely of interstate commerce. Atty.-Gen. v. Electric Storage Battery Co. 188 Mass. 239. The tax is levied upon the privilege of carrying on business within the state and not upon property therein which is otherwise taxed. It is said, notwithstanding, that this tax is a direct burden upon interstate commerce and an attempt to tax property beyond the jurisdiction of the state within the authority of the Kansas cases, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas [216 U. S. 1, 30 S. Ct. 190, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 355], supra; Pullman Co. v. Kansas [216 U. S. 56, 30 S. Ct. 232, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 378], supra. . . . An examination of the previous decisions in this court shows that they have been decided upon the application to the facts of each case of the principles which we have undertaken to state, and a tax has only been invalidated where its necessary effect was to burden interstate commerce or to tax property beyond the jurisdiction of the state. In the cases at bar the business for which the companies are chartered is not of itself commerce. True it is that their products are sold and shipped in interstate commerce, and to that extent they are engaged in the business of carrying on interstate commerce and are entitled to the protection of the federal constitution against laws burdening commerce of that character. Interstate commerce of all kinds is within the protection of the Constitution of the United States, and it is not within the authority of a state to tax it by burdensome laws. From the statement of facts it is apparent, however, that each of the corporations in question is carrying on a purely local and domestic business quite separate from its interstate transactions. That local and domestic business, for the privilege of doing which the state has imposed a tax, is real and substantial and not so connected with interstate commerce as to render a tax upon it a burden upon the interstate business of the companies involved. In these cases the ultimate contention is not that the receipts from interstate commerce are taxed as such, but that the property of the corporations, including that used in such commerce, represented by the authorized capital of the corporations, is taxed and therefore interstate commerce is unlawfully burdened by a state statute. While the tax is imposed by taking a percentage of the authorized capital, the agreed facts show that the authorized capital is only a part of the capital of the corporations, respectively. In the Baltic Mining Company Case, the authorized capital is $2,500,000, while the entire property and assets are $10,770,000; and in the White Dental Company Case the authorized capital is $1,000,000, while the assets aggregate $5,711,718.29. Further, the Massachusetts statute limits the tax to a maximum of $2,000. The conclusion, therefore, that the authorized capital is only used as the measure of a tax, in itself lawful, without the necessary effect of burdening interstate commerce, brings the legislation within the authority of the state."

Following the rule announced in Baltic Min. Co. v. Massachusetts, supra, the court in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Gifford, 25 Idaho 196, 136 Pac. 1131, upheld the validity of an Idaho statute taxing both domestic and foreign corporations according to a graduated scale based on the authorized capital stock of the corporation. Concerning that statute the court said: "It seems to us that the Idaho statute is freer from objection than the Massachusetts statute upon the point that it attempts to tax the property of the corporation outside of and beyond the jurisdiction of the state. The Massachusetts statute, as will be observed, measures the license or excise tax to be collected by a straight percentage of 'one-fiftieth of one per cent. of the par value of its authorized capital stock,' while under the Idaho statute the fee charged is a trifle, based upon a slightly ascending scale, starting with the sum of ten dollars on a five thousand dollar corporation and ascending at stated amounts until the largest possible corporation is required to pay an annual fee of one hundred and fifty dollars, while in the Massachusetts case the maximum fee might reach the sum of two thousand dollars. Our statute is not based on any established percentage of the company's property or capital stock. The fee exacted under the Idaho statute is an excise tax on the right of a foreign corporation to carry on business within the state, that is, intrastate business, or purely local and domestic business, as distinguished from any interstate business it may be doing. This statute provides by secs. 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 for the termination of the right of a foreign corporation 'doing business within the state' after failing to pay its license tax. No such consequence can be visited upon a corporation for engaging in any interstate business within the state, and a forfeiture under the statute of the right of a foreign corporation to do local or domestic business would in no way effect the right of a corporation to continue to carry on its interstate business and to do all things necessary to be done in conducting such business." Continuing, the court, after quoting from the opinion in Baltic Min. Co. v. Massachusetts, remarked: "The foregoing excerpt reminds one of the impression he has after reading the Kansas cases, namely, that the really controlling consideration with the great jurist who wrote the majority opinion of the court in those cases was the fact that the amount of the excise or license fee laid upon the corporations by the statute of Kansas was so exorbitant and unreasonable that the companies would not likely have been able to pay the same and would have as an alternative been obliged to abandon their local or intrastate business if the statute had been upheld, and that the Kansas legislature was in fact trying to tax the whole property of the corporation, and so the court concluded that it amounted to really laying a tax upon all the property of the companies, whether within or beyond the state, and had the effect of both interfering with interstate commerce and taking the property of the company without due process of law. . . . The comment of the writer of the latest opinion to the effect that it is the settled purpose of that court to decide each case upon its own facts, irrespective of any theoretical rule, convinces us that the supreme court intend to determine the effect of the statute as it will apply in actual practice, rather than decide it upon the theory of any apprehended dangers which might flow from other similar legislation which might prove more exacting. Indeed, the court says: 'A tax has only been invalidated where its necessary effect was to burden interstate commerce or to tax property beyond the jurisdiction of the state.'"

Likewise, a Kansas statute, taxing foreign corporations according to a graduated scale based on the proportion of the issued capital stock of the corporation represented by its property and business in Kansas, has been upheld. State v. Sessions, 95 Kan. 272, 147 Pac. 789, wherein the court, presuming that the taxing officer excluded interstate business and considered only the local business as "business in Kansas," said: "The privilege of a foreign corporation to engage here in business, other than interstate commerce, being one which the state may grant or withhold, is a legitimate subject of taxation. That privilege is protected by state laws, in common with other interests, and the giving of such protection adds something to the cost of local government. They who exercise the privilege ought, in fairness, by reason of it to bear a small additional share of the common burden of taxation. The amount of contribution asked is arrived at in what seems to be the most reasonable way. The effort to reach a just result without interfering with the operations of interstate commerce has obviously been made in good faith, and we think with entire success."

A Montana statute was upheld by the court in State v. Alderson, 49 Mont. 29, 140 Pac. 82, wherein it was said: "The fee demanded by section 165 is graduated according to the par value of the company's capital stock, without reference to the full cash value of the property owned by the corporation. For instance: A corporation with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars is required to pay only fifty dollars, though its property represented by that capital stock may be worth a million dollars. Further more, this fee is not a recurring one; it is demanded but once. That the legislature did not treat it as a property tax is indicated by the failure to provide any means for its collection. A foreign corporation may be denied admission here, but it cannot be made to pay the fee in the same sense that any other tax-paying individual or corporation may be coerced into paying property taxes. This fee does not become a lien upon any property which the corporation may have in this state, as does a property tax under section 2600, Revised Codes. The amount of this fee is fixed by law and does not vary from time to time, while the rate of taxation for property taxes is fixed by the legislature for the state and by the county boards for the respective counties, and varies from year to year with the necessities for greater or less revenue. These considerations justify our conclusion that the fee is not a property tax. It is an impost, an excise, or a license tax exacted of every corporation, domestic as well as foreign, engaged in intrastate business, for the privilege of doing business within this state, enjoying the protection of our laws and the pecuniary advantages afforded by our markets. . . . The par value of the capital stock is merely made the standard or measuring rod, upon the assumption, whether justified or not, that the advantage gained by corporations in transacting business within this state will be in some measure proportioned according to the amount of their capital stock."

A Tennessee statute, taxing foreign corporations according to their authorized capital stock for the privilege of doing business in Tennessee, has been upheld. Atlas Powder Co. v. Goodloe, 131 Tenn. 490, 175 S. W. 547, wherein the court said: "Where the imposition of a tax by a state does not burden or affect interstate commerce, the control of the legislature over foreign corporations is supreme. . . . The present case must be determined upon its own facts. There is a strong similarity in facts here to the business of the Baltic Company and the Dental Company. All are engaged to a large extent in interstate commerce, but they are each primarily manufacturing corporations, and engaged in selling their own products upon the market. In those two federal cases neither company owned a factory in Massachusetts, but each had local storehouses where local sales were made. They could have omitted the local business if they saw proper, and thus separated the local business from the interstate commerce. This was entirely optional, as it is in the case at bar. A sharp distinction exists in the Pullman Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company cases, in that those concerns were public service corporations and were bound to accept local business. One important feature in the case at bar is that it is engaged in manufacturing black gunpowder at its factory at Ooltewah, in this state, and it also has six storage magazines where explosives are kept. It also has its places in this state in a number of cities where local sales are made. It occurs to us that any part of this local business is of such character as to render the complainant liable to the payment of this charter tax, or tax on its right to enter the state to do intrastate business. Certainly the manufacturing business in this state and the operation of storage magazines are so far separated from the interstate sales of explosives that there can be but little difficulty in the conclusion that the right of the state to impose this tax is clear, and we so hold."

Holding that a discriminatory tax on foreign corporations is not necessarily a denial of the equal protection of the laws, the court, in Baltic Min. Co. v. Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 34 S. Ct. 15, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 127, supra, said: "It is further contended that the imposition of the tax denies the equal protection of the laws, and this upon the authority of Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400 [17 Ann. Cas. 1247, 30 S. Ct. 287, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 536]. In that case the railway company had gone into the state of Alabama and, under authority of the state, acquired a large amount of railroad property upon which it paid taxes as well as a license tax imposed by the state. After the payment of all such taxes and in this condition of affairs, the state undertook to levy upon the railroad company a privilege tax because it was a foreign corporation, not imposing the same tax upon domestic corporations doing precisely the same business. This court held that the railroad company was a person within the meaning of the Constitution and entitled to the equal protection of the laws and that by the taxation of its railroad property under such circumstances it was denied the equal protection of the law, no like tax being levied upon domestic corporations. It was said in that case (p. 416): 'We have here a foreign corporation within a state, in compliance with the laws of the state, which has lawfully acquired a large amount of permanent and valuable property therein, and which is taxed by a discriminating method not employed as to domestic corporations of the same kind, carrying on a precisely similar business.' The conditions existing in the Southern Railway Co. v. Greene Case are not presented here. It is true that the plaintiffs in error paid taxes assessed against foreign corporations before the passage of the law of 1909 and that the White Dental Company had a leasehold for storerooms in the state, but we do not find in this situation an acquisition of permanent property, such as was shown in the Greene Case. And there is no question of the continued authority of the state to tax a foreign corporation for the privilege of doing business within its borders, which authority the state possesses so long as it does not violate rights secured by the Federal Constitution. Even if, as plaintiffs in error contend, under the statute, domestic corporations are favored, the statute is not invalid, for no limitation upon the power of a state to exclude foreign corporations requires identical taxes in all cases upon domestic and foreign corporations."

A municipal tax may be imposed on a telegraph company where the tax does not apply to government messages or to interstate messages. Ferguson v. McDonald, 66 Fla. 494, 63 So. 915, wherein the court said: "The mere fact that the telegraph company is engaged in sending interstate and government messages does not exempt the company or its agents from the operation of valid state and municipal taxation and regulations of local and intrastate business, where such regulations do not burden interstate commerce or violate any paramount authority or regulation of Congress. Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 191 U. S. 171, 24 S. Ct. 39 [48 U. S. (L. ed.) 134]. It does not appear that Congress has made or authorized any regulations upon the subject, and there is nothing to indicate that the enforcement of the license ordinance has in any way encroached upon the authority of Congress in the premises, or interfered with or burdened the business of the company in transmitting interstate or government messages."

TAX HELD INVALID.

A tax on property beyond the jurisdiction of the state or one burdening interstate commerce cannot be imposed. Crane Co. v. Looney, 218 Fed. 260; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Mississippi R. Commission, 229 Fed. 248; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Swindlehurst, 47 Mont. 110, 130 Pac. 966; Hirschfield v. McCullagh, 64 Ore. 502, 127 Pac. 541, 130 Pac. 1131. In Crane Co. v. Looney, supra, the court explained and applied the rule as follows: "The necessary effect of the enforcement of the two statutes brought into question is to make plaintiff's right to do a Texas intrastate business dependent upon the payment of a sum which becomes greater or less according as its assets outside of the state and its interstate and foreign business grow greater or smaller, though its property situated in Texas and its intrastate business there may remain stationary. The case of the Baltic Mining Company, cited supra, was not one in which there was any such necessary relation between the amount of the excise charge and the amount or value of the corporation's property outside of the state or of its interstate or foreign business. The charge imposed by the statute there in question was measured by the amount of the par value of its authorized capital, without regard to the actual value of its assets, whether more or less than that of its nominal capital stock. The charge was not measured by the amount or value of the corporation's assets or the extent of its actual business anywhere or of any kind. The terms of the statute made the charge the same, whether the actual value of the assets of the corporation was more or less than the amount of the par value of its authorized capital stock, and whatever may have been the nature or extent of the business in which it was engaged. Nothing said in the opinion rendered in that case indicates the court's departure from or modification of the rule announced in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 42, 30 S. Ct. 190, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 355, to the effect that a state may not forbid the doing of a local business within its limits by a corporation of another state or foreign country except subject to the condition that such corporation first pay to the state a given per cent. of its entire capitalization, representing the value of all its business, property, and interests within and without the state, thereby placing a direct burden on the privilege or franchise of transacting interstate commerce and taxing property rights beyond the jurisdiction of the state for purposes of taxation. The joint effect of the two statutes, considered together, as they must be, as the right of the corporation to do business in the state is withheld if either of them is not complied with, is to make the privilege of doing a local business in Texas subject to the condition that it shall first pay to the state a given per cent. of all its capital and surplus, representing all of its property wherever situated, and all its business, intrastate and interstate. An imposition which is based, whether in whole or in substantial part, on the value of property outside of the state, or on interstate or foreign commerce engaged in, so that the amount of it grows in exact proportion to the growth of such property or commerce, is a burden on such property or commerce. This burden the state cannot impose, either directly or as a condition to the grant of a privilege which it may confer or withhold."

SAULMAN

v.

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF NASHVILLE.

Tennessee Supreme Court—March 19, 1915.

131 Tenn. 427; 175 S. W. 532.

Municipal Corporations — Operation of Electric Plant — Liability for Personal Injury.

A city, owning and operating an electric plant, as authorized by Acts 1891, c. 207, and Acts 1901, c. 11, though only to light its streets and municipal buildings, is engaging in performing a private function; and hence the rule of respondeat superior applies to it, so as to render it liable for negligent construction and maintenance of a heavily charged wire, which by coming in contact with a guy wire attached to a telephone pole caused the death of a lineman employed by the telephone company.

[See note at end of this case.]

Certiorari to Court of Civil Appeals.

Action for damages. Mrs. Ida Saulman, administratrix, plaintiff, and Mayor and City Council of Nashville, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff in Circuit Court. Judgment reversed by Court of Civil Appeals. Plaintiff brings certiorari. The facts are stated in the opinion REVERSED.

Pendleton & De Witt for plaintiff.

A. G. Ewing and F. M. Garard for defendant.

[428] BUCHANAN, J.—The question on which this case turns is whether, under its facts, the city was, at the time of the act on which its liability is predicated, engaged in the performance of a governmental function or a private one. The case is before us on certiorari. The court of civil appeals held that the city was engaged in the discharge of a governmental function.

The liability of the city is predicated upon the negligent construction and maintenance of a heavily charged electric light wire, which, on account of such [429] negligence, came into contact with a guy wire attached to one of the poles of a telephone company, and charged the guy wire with a deadly current of electricity, which was communicated to the body of the intestate of the administratrix, and caused his death, when he attempted, in the exercise of due care, to ascend the telephone pole in the discharge of his duties as a lineman in the employ of the telephone company. No question is made by the city against the judgment of the court of civil appeals; the case being before us solely on the petition and assignments of error filed by the administratrix.

The following facts appear without dispute: The municipal defendant, prior to and at the time of the injury to plaintiff's intestate, was authorized by its charter to build or purchase, own, and operate electric light works, for the purpose of lighting public buildings or streets, or other public places in the city, and for the sale of electric current to all persons desiring to purchase the same, either for lighting, heating, or power, or for any purpose whatsoever. This authority was vested in the defendant under chapter 207, Acts 1891, and chapter 11, Acts 1901, and pursuant to this authority the city, at the time of the injury, owned, controlled, and was operating an electric light works, plant, or system, and the wire, which was so constructed and maintained that it was the cause of the injury to plaintiff's intestate, was a part of the system, plant, or works so owned and operated by the city. But at the time of the injury the [430] city was not and had not been engaged in the sale of electric current or the furnishing of electric lights to private consumers, and the current generated by the city was used exclusively for the purpose of lighting the streets, fire halls, and public buildings of the city. That the injury was caused by the negligence of the municipal defendant in the original suspension and subsequent maintenance of the wire owned by the city which came into contact with the guy wire of the telephone company is a fact undisputed and settled by the verdict of the jury. It is manifest that the communication of the deadly current from the wire of the city to the guy wire was the result of friction which destroyed the insulation of the city's wire. It is also clear that at the time of the fatal injury plaintiff's intestate was rightfully upon the pole owned by his employer in the discharge of his duties, and in no sense a bare licensee or trespasser, and the verdict of the jury settled the fact that he was free from contributory negligence at the time of his injury.

Originally plaintiff's suit in this cause was brought against the telephone company and the municipal defendant as joint tort-feasors, but subsequent to the origin of the suit the telephone company, by payment of a sum certain to plaintiff and taking from her a covenant not to further prosecute her suit against it, in the form approved in our recent case (Smith v. Dixie Park, etc. Co. 128 Tenn. 112, 157 S. W. 900), discharged its liability, and that branch of the case is not before us now.

[431] Passing, now, to the single issue of law arising upon the facts, we observe in the outset that, since the decision in Russell v. Men of Devon County, 2 T. R. (Eng.) 667, it has been settled at common law that liability does not exist against a political subdivision of the State, based upon the misconduct or nonfeasance of public officers, in favor of an individual, and in the cases which undertook to give a reason for the rule it was held to be better that the individual should suffer than that he should be allowed to inflict on the public the inconvenience of affording him redress. Other reasons were given by later cases.

But in Moodalay v. Morton, 1 Bro. Ch. (Eng.) 469, the Master of the Rolls, while admitting the rule, denied that the defendants fell within it. "They have rights," said he, "as a sovereign power; they have also duties as individuals. If they enter into bonds in India, the sums secured may be recovered here. So, in this case, as a private company they have entered into a private contract, to which they must be liable."

From this slight relaxation of the original rule, exceptions to it have grown up, until, on examination of the reported cases, they appear to be quite as numerous as applications of the rule. An instructive note reviewing the earlier cases accompanies Barron v. Detroit, 94 Mich. 601, 54 N. W. 273, 34 Am. St. Rep. 366, 19 L.R.A. 452. In fact, so large has been the ingrafting of exceptions upon the original rule by our American courts that in his excellent work on Municipal [432] Corporations (volume 4, section 2622) Mr. McQuillan says:

"Yet in every State except South Carolina it is the settled rule that a municipality is liable at common law for its torts in the performance or nonperformance of municipal or corporate duties, as distinguished from governmental duties."

And to sustain the quoted text the author cites Irvine v. Greenwood, 89 S. C. 511, 72 S. E. 228, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 363. And this learned author in the same section adds:

"In other words, where its officers or servants are in the exercise of power conferred upon the municipality for its private benefit or pecuniary profit, and damage results from their negligence or misfeasance, the municipality is liable to the same extent as in the case of private corporations or individuals."

To sustain the text just above set out, the author cites cases from twenty-nine courts of last resort in the United States and one from the supreme court of the United States, and in the same section it is said:

"That while acting in its private capacity a municipality is liable to the same extent as a private corporation or individual [citing Provine v. Seattle, 59 Wash. 681, 110 Pac. 619; Toledo v. Cone, 41 Ohio St. 149]. Furthermore, for torts committed by its agents and servants in the performance of corporate or private duties the municipality is liable, whether the tortious act was done negligently or intentionally." [433] (citing Johnson v. Somerville, 195 Mass. 370, 81 N. E. 268, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 715).

In substantial accord with the views above stated are those announced in Dillon on Municipal Corporations (last edition) sections 1665, 1666, 1670, 1671. Coming nearer to the exact question in the present case is what is said by the author last named at section 1670 of his work, as follows:

"Thus, in the case of municipal electric light works, the city is under obligations to exercise reasonable care in constructing and maintaining its poles and wires in the public streets and on private property, and if any person is injured through neglect of the city or its officers, agents, or employees in that respect, the city is liable in damages."

And, says Mr. McQuillan, in his work on Municipal Corporations (section 2680):

"It is settled beyond dispute that a municipality which operates its own water, electric light, or gas plant acts in a private and not a governmental capacity, and is liable for its negligence in connection therewith."

See, also, the following authorities: Abbott on Municipal Corporations, section 955; Davoust v. Alameda, 149 Cal. 69, 84 Pac. 760, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 536 and note, 9 Ann. Cas. 847; Bullmaster v. St. Joseph, 70 Mo. App. 60; Boothe v. Fulton, 85 Mo. App. 19; Rhobidas v. Concord, 70 N. H. 90, 47 Atl. 82, 51 L.R.A. 381 and note, 85 Am. St. Rep. 604; Brown v. Salt Lake [434] City, 33 Utah 222, 93 Pac. 570, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 1004, and note.

The court of civil appeals in the present case denied the liability of the city upon the ground that, at the time of the injury and prior thereto, the city was using its electric light plant only for the purpose of lighting its streets and municipal buildings, and had not sold any of its electric light current to private consumers. We think it is error to suppose that the sale of part of the electric current which it manufactured was the only way in which the city could derive a corporate emolument from the possession, ownership, and operation of such a plant. Of course, the taking of money from private consumers of its current might be the most unequivocal proof that the city was deriving corporate emolument as the result of such operation; but this is the utmost significance which such a fact should have in determining the ultimate question. At most, it is but a conclusive badge indicating a private as contradistinguished from a public use. But the absence of such a badge clearly does not convert the user into a private one, nor amount to conclusive proof that such was the character of the user.

The city is a corporate entity, located within the physical boundaries of the State, and existing by virtue of the sovereign will of the State. "Imperium in imperio." The city holds an easement in the streets in trust for the convenience of the citizens. "The corporation has the power to grade, macadamize, or do anything else for the improvement of the streets whereby [435] they may be made to answer the end for which they were designated. Humes v. Knoxville, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 403, 408, 34 Am. Dec. 657. Springing out of this right and power of the corporation is a liability against it for a wanton or negligent failure to use reasonable diligence and care, so to exercise the power as not unnecessarily to injure the property of abutting owners. Humes v. Knoxville, supra; Knoxville v. Harth, 105 Tenn. 436, 58 S. W. 650, 80 Am. St. Rep. 901.

From the same easement and power over its streets there flows another corporate liability, to wit, for "the wrongful acts and neglects of their servants and agents" which unreasonably expose persons who use the streets for purposes of travel to injury, and where injury results while the traveler was in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care, or free from contributory negligence. Memphis v. Lasser, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 757; Nashville v. Brown, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1, 24 Am. Rep. 289; Knoxville v. Bell, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 157; Oliver v. Nashville, 106 Tenn. 273, 61 S. W. 89; Doyle v. Chattanooga, 128 Tenn. 433, Ann. Cas. 1915C 283, 161 S. W. 997.

In the leading case of the line just named (Memphis v. Lasser, supra), the city sought to avoid liability upon the ground that at the time it performed the act resulting in plaintiff's injury it was engaged in the discharge of a public function or duty, to which the [436] doctrine of respondeat superior did not apply; but the court said, "No," and further:

"All the powers conferred upon a corporation for the local government of a town or city are, in judgment of law, for the private benefit of such corporation, although the public at large may also derive benefit therefrom. And whether the object of a given improvement be to confer a direct benefit or convenience upon the inhabitants of the corporation, as to furnish water facilities or the like, or whether it be to swell the revenues of the corporation, is wholly immaterial. The principle governing the liability of the corporation is precisely the same in both cases. And it is the province of the court to construe and interpret the charter of the corporation, to determine the nature and extent of the powers conferred, and to judge what acts do or do not fall within the legitimate scope of the authority bestowed and the purposes for which it may have been created. The court in this case did not err, therefore, in tacitly assuming as a matter of law that the construction of the work in question was within the scope of the powers conferred and for the private benefit of the corporation."

Further in the opinion, and quoting from Lord Ellenborough in Yarborough v. Bank of England, 16 East (Eng.) 6, it was said:

"Whenever a corporation is competent to do, or order to be done, any act on its behalf, it is liable for the consequences of such act, if it be of a tortious nature, and to the prejudice of another."

[437] We think the opinion above quoted from is full negation of every reason advanced in the present case to free the city from liability. To be sure, in Memphis v. Lasser, the manifest purpose of the city in digging the cistern into which Lasser fell was to furnish water for the extinguishment of fires, while in the present case the purpose for which it maintained the electric wire was to furnish light for its streets and public buildings. If there is any material distinction between the two purposes, which would make for liability in the one and avoid it in the other, we are unable to perceive it.

The reason on which the court of civil appeals bases its holding freeing the city from liability because it did not sell any of its current to private consumers is in conflict with the opinion in the Lasser Case, where it is said:

"And whether the object of a given improvement be to confer a direct benefit or convenience upon the inhabitants of the corporation, as to furnish water facilities or the like, or whether it be to swell the revenues of the corporation, is wholly immaterial. The principle governing the liability of the corporation is precisely the same in both cases."

Our case (Memphis v. Kimbrough, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 133) presents a case of municipal ownership. There the property owned by the city was a steamboat wharf, on which an iron cylinder was negligently allowed to remain concealed by the water of the river, which had overflowed it. A collision between a steamboat and the cylinder resulted in the sinking of the [438] boat, and the owner sued the city for damages and recovered a judgment, which this court affirmed. It appeared that one of the officers of the city provided for by its charter, and to be elected, was a wharfmaster; also that the ordinances of the city required him to keep the wharf free from obstructions. The city received money from steamboats for the use of the wharf, but this fact was clearly not regarded as controlling on the ultimate question of liability. The court said the duty imposed on the city by its charter was a corporate one and not a public one; in respect of the whole public, its duty was absolute and perfect, and not discretionary or judicial, in character, and plaintiff had an interest in the discharge of the duty of the city to keep the wharf in repair. The wharfmaster was not acting as a public officer, but as the agent or servant of the corporation, for its benefit and that of the individuals using the wharf. It is clear that the collection of tolls for use of the wharf was only a matter of evidence tending to shed light on the character of the act on which liability was predicated. That its absence would not have avoided the liability of the city is manifest from the long line of cases, beginning with Memphis v. Lasser, supra, where no such fact appears. That our view of the question is supported by the clear weight of authoritative English and American decisions we have no doubt. There are some opposing views in other jurisdictions, but they are not supported by reason nor by weight of authority.

[439] We have another line of cases where, on the facts in each, liability of the municipal defendant was denied on the ground that, at the time of the injury complained of, the city was engaged in the discharge of a public function. Some of these cases are Foster v. Lookout Water Co. 3 Lea (Tenn.) 42; Davis v. Knoxville, 90 Tenn. 600, 18 S. W. 254; Irvine v. Chattanooga, 101 Tenn. 291, 47 S. W. 419; Chattanooga v. Reid, 103 Tenn. 616, 53 S. W. 937.

The principles governing in those cases do not apply to the facts of this one. Here we have a municipal corporation authorized by its charter to own and operate for its private emolument an electric light plant, and we find it in the exercise of that power, enjoying the franchise conferred upon it by the sovereign State for the private emolument of it as a corporation and of its citizens residing within its local boundaries. We find it and its citizens deriving from the use of the property a private benefit not enjoyed by the general public composing the sovereign State, resident outside the boundaries of the corporate defendant—the same kind of private benefit which the same corporate defendant and its citizens realize from the use of improved streets and other local comforts. Under such conditions as these, the municipal corporation may no more be relieved of liability where by the misfeasance of its servant it places a death trap on a telephone pole than if such a trap had been placed on the street. Its servant was bound to know that, in [440] the discharge of their duties, the linemen of the telephone company would be under necessity of ascending the pole, just as its servant in charge of its streets is bound to know that travelers are under necessity of using its streets. No material distinction can be drawn, and in either case the violation of implied duty is tortious in its character, and the doctrine of respondet superior applies.

The judgment of the court of civil appeals was erroneous, and will be reversed. The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that a municipality operating an electric lighting plant exercises a private and not a governmental function, though the light is used only for lighting the streets and the public buildings, and accordingly is liable for a personal injury caused by the negligent manner in which the plant is maintained or operated. The earlier cases discussing the liability of a municipal corporation for negligence in the operation of an electric light plant are reviewed in the notes to Davoust v. Alameda, 9 Ann. Cas. 847; Young v. Gravenhurst, Ann. Cas. 1912B 812; Hebert v. Lake Charles Ice, etc. Co. 100 Am. St. Rep. 505, 515.

CHACE

v.

CITY COUNCIL OF PROVIDENCE.

Rhode Island Supreme Court—March 23, 1914.

36 R. I. 331; 89 Atl. 1066.

Public Officers — Removal — Hearing — Right to Appoint Committee.

Where charges are filed before a city council against a relator to remove him from the position of milk sample collector for cause, the fact that a joint committee is appointed to take the evidence and report findings to the council does not deprive him of a trial before council as a whole; if it meets in joint session after the report and findings of the committee are filed, and gives relator an opportunity for a hearing before it, of which he neglects to avail himself, prior to the adoption of a resolution finding him guilty of the charges in accordance with the findings, and ordering his removal.

[See note at end of this case.]

Mandamus — Grounds — Restoration to Office.

A petition for mandamus is appropriate to compel the restoration to office of a rightful incumbent who has been wrongfully removed.

Municipal Corporations — Power to Remove Officer — Milk Inspector.

Act March 14, 1870, c. 829, provided that the mayor and aldermen of any city and town council of any town might annually appoint one or more milk inspectors for their respective places, and Laws 1912, c. 863, required the election of a milk inspector in the city of Providence obligatory. Laws 1896, c. 333, § 1, authorized inspectors to employ, subject to the approval of the town council and the mayor and aldermen, one person as collector of samples, which collector, on being employed, is required to be engaged to the faithful discharge of his duties before the city or town clerk, who was required to keep a record thereof, and should receive such salary as the mayor and aldermen or town council should determine. Laws 1900, c. 785, § 1, provides that the inspector may at any time dismiss such collector, and, subject to the same approval, may appoint another person in his stead. Held that, since boards of aldermen and town councils are expressly authorized to act as local boards of health, and the city council of the city of Providence is vested with such jurisdiction by its charter, a milk sample collector appointed pursuant to such statutes in the city of Providence was not a state or public officer, but was an employee whom the city council could remove for cause, and whom the council might suspend from service pending the determination of charges.

Appeal from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol counties: STEARNS, Judge.

Action for mandamus and original petition for writ of certiorari. Baylies R. Chase, plaintiff, and City Council of Providence, defendant. Judgment for defendant in Superior Court. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. Judgment of Superior Court AFFIRMED and petition for writ of certiorari DENIED.

Cooney & Cahill for petitioner.

Albert A. Baker and Elmer S. Chase for respondent.

[333] PARKHURST, J.—These are two cases between the same parties; and although they were argued at different times, the questions arising in both cases are so closely related and interwoven that, for convenience, we shall consider and determine both cases in one opinion.

The first case is an appeal from the judgment of the Superior Court denying and dismissing the petition of Baylies R. Chase for a writ of mandamus to compel the defendant members of the city council of the city of Providence to convene and to remove the suspension of said Chase from the office of collector of samples of milk and to restore him to said office, from which he had been suspended by the following joint resolution of said city council, passed on July 8, 1913:

"Resolved, That Walter O. Scott, Inspector of Milk, and Baylies R. Chase, Collector of Samples, of the city of Providence, be and they hereby are severally suspended from their said respective offices, such suspensions to continue in effect from the date of the passage hereof and until the hearings on the pending charges against said officers respectively shall have been had and the city council shall have taken final action relative to such respective charges.

"And that the superintendent of health of the city is hereby authorized and directed during the period of said suspension of said inspector of milk to supervise the quality of milk sold and delivered in the city of Providence, and to take any lawful steps necessary to prevent and restrain the sale of adulterated milk or milk below the required standard and deemed adulterated under Chapter 173 of the General Laws, entitled 'Of Milk,' and said superintendent is hereby authorized to cause all samples of milk collected by any officer of the city, or by any person employed by said superintendent to obtain specimens of the milk being supplied in the city, or received by said superintendent from any residents of the city to be tested and analyzed, and to notify [334] the chief of police of all violations discovered by him in said Chapter 173 of the General Laws; and said superintendent may use any property of the city used by or in charge of the inspector of milk; and the expenses of said superintendent hereunder shall be charged to the appropriation for the health department.

"And that the city clerk is hereby directed forthwith upon the passage hereof to cause copies hereof, duly certified by him, to be served by the city sergeant upon said Walter O. Scott and Baylies R. Chase severally."

Said charges are specified in papers accompanying a joint resolution of said city council, also passed July 8, 1913, entitled "Resolution Creating a Joint Special Committee with Certain Powers and Duties Relative to Charges Against Members of the Milk Department of the City," which resolution reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Mayor and Aldermen Moulton and Kelso of the board of aldermen, designated by the Mayor, and Messrs. Harden, Phillips and Berth of the common council, designated by the president thereof, be and they hereby are appointed a joint special committee of the city council, with the following powers and duties. Said joint special committee shall hear and receive the evidence presented in support of and against the accompanying charges against two officers of the milk department of the city, namely, Walter O. Scott, Inspector of Milk, and Baylies R. Chace, Collector of Samples, which charges, as recommended by the committee on milk to the board of aldermen, have been formulated by the law department; and said joint special committee shall cause said evidence to be taken stenographically, transcribed and with any documentary, book or other exhibit evidence in any form received by said committee to be filed with either branch of the city council, and therewith said committee shall submit to the city council its report relative to such charges and evidence, its findings thereon and its recommendations, for such further action as the city council may determine. Said [335] committee may cause the transcribed evidence to be printed, and printed copies thereof to be also filed as aforesaid for the use of the city council, and may make its report in print.

"In case pending such proceedings any further or other charge or charges shall be made to said committee by any citizen or citizens of the city against said inspector or said collector, or any other member of the milk department, said committee in its discretion may also investigate as to such charge or charges, after giving the accused reasonable notice thereof, and in such case shall also submit the evidence relative thereto and its report thereon to the city council as aforesaid.

"Such officer or officers of the law department as designated by the city solicitor shall prosecute said charges before said joint special committee; and any expenses of said joint special committee relative to its duties hereunder on the approval of its chairman, and the expenses of the law department incident to summoning witnesses, investigating any relevant matters or otherwise relative to prosecuting the charges, on the approval of the city solicitor, shall be paid from the balance of the appropriation made by resolution No. 217, approved May 22, 1913, and any amount of any such expenses in excess thereof from the appropriation for the city council. Forthwith upon the passage of this resolution, the city clerk or one of the deputy city clerks shall cause copies hereof and of the accompanying charges, duly certified by him, to be served by the city sergeant upon said Walter O. Scott and Baylies R. Chace severally, and on Monday, July 14, 1913, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the council chamber, city hall; said committee shall convene, and proceed with the performance of its duties hereunder."

The city sergeant of said city on July 8, 1913, duly served copies of both said resolutions, and of said charges, duly certified by the city clerk of said city on said Scott and Chace severally.

[336] Said charges allege grave dereliction of duty on the part of both said Scott and Chace, and include charges against said Chace that he had received money graft or bribes, and are serious, substantial and specific.

Immediately after the passage of said resolutions and notice thereof and of said charges, said Chace filed this petition, which was denied by a judge of the Superior Court after hearing evidence and argument; a decree was entered denying and dismissing the petition and an appeal to this court was duly claimed and prosecuted, and is now before this court.

The petition sets forth the appointment of the petitioner to the office of collector of samples of milk by Scott, the inspector of milk, and that he was at the time of the passage of the above quoted resolutions suspending him from office, to wit, on the 8th day of July, 1913, and for a long time prior thereto, a duly qualified collector of samples of milk for the city of Providence and was and had been for a long time discharging the duties of said office. It then sets forth the passage of the above quoted joint resolution of suspension, and alleges that the city council has deprived the petitioner of his office room, books, papers, records, etc., and has prevented and still prevents him from exercising the duties of his office.

Said petitioner then sets forth his contentions, as follows:

"Fourth. And your petitioner further shows that the office of collector of samples of milk, of which he is the incumbent duly appointed by the milk inspector of the city of Providence, by virtue of Chapter 173, General Laws, Rhode Island, 1909, is a State or public office, and not a city or corporate office, and your petitioner as such collector of samples of milk under and by virtue of Section 9, cap. 173, General Laws of Rhode Island, 1909, is a State or public officer, and not a city or corporate officer, and he avers that said city council was not only without authority, but wholly without jurisdiction to act in the premises.

[337] "Fifth. Your petitioner further shows that said common council did not elect or appoint your petitioner to his said office, nor participate in his election or appointment, and they had no lawful right, power or authority to join with the board of aldermen in said purported suspension of your petitioner as above set forth.

"Sixth. And your petitioner alleges that the matter of said purported suspensions was not within the jurisdiction of said city council."

Petitioner then alleges service upon him of a certified copy of said joint resolution of suspension, and the filing by him of a protest, in writing, addressed to said city council, on the ground that said council was without lawful authority or jurisdiction in the premises, and prays for a writ of mandamus as above set forth.

The city charter contains the following provisions:

Section II. "Clause 1. The administration of all the fiscal, prudential and municipal affairs of said city, with the conduct and government thereof, shall be vested in one principal officer to be styled the mayor; one council of ten persons to be styled the aldermen; and one council of forty persons to be styled the common council; together with such other magistrates or officers as are hereinafter specified, or by the laws of this State or the ordinances of the said city are, or hereafter may be, authorized or prescribed.

"Clause 2. The mayor, aldermen, and common council, in their joint capacity, shall be styled the city council."

Section VIII. "Clause 1. The mayor and aldermen shall exercise the executive powers of said city generally, and the administration of police; together with such other powers as now are, or hereafter may be, conferred upon them by the laws of this State or by the ordinances of the city council."

Section IX. "Clause 1. The city council of said city shall have power to make laws, ordinances and regulations for the government of of said city, relative to" . . . "the [338] police department" . . . "the public health," etc. . . .

"Clause 4. The city council shall have power to appoint . . . "an officer to be styled the chief of police, and to prescribe his duties and fix his compensation." . . .

"Clause 9. The city council may by a concurrent vote, two-thirds of the members elected to either board voting in the affirmative, remove all officers for misconduct or incapacity." (See Charter and Special Laws, City of Providence, 1901, pp. 1-et seq.)

Prior to 1798, by the laws of this State, the town councils of the respective towns were authorized "to make and prescribe such orders and regulations as they may deem prudent and advisable, for the preservation of the health of the inhabitants," etc. (See Revision of 1798, p. 344, Sec. 19.)

In Rev. Stat. 1857, Chap. 34, § 11, p. 100, it is provided as follows: "Sec. 11. The several town councils and boards of aldermen shall be ex officio boards of health in their respective towns, and may make such rules and regulations not repugnant to law, as they shall judge proper, for the preservation of the health of the inhabitants thereof," etc.

These provisions have been substantially reenacted in every subsequent revision and have remained in force down to the present time, and now appear in Gen. Laws, 1909, Chap. 50, § 13, p. 232, and under said provisions, and by virtue of the city charter Section VIII. Clause 1, above quoted, the mayor and aldermen of the city of Providence have always acted as the board of health of the city of Providence, and have been so designated in its official manual down to the present time.

By act of the General Assembly, c. 829, passed March 14, 1870, it was provided that "the mayor and aldermen of any city, and the town council of any town, may annually appoint one or more persons to be inspectors of milk for their respective places," etc., providing for giving public [339] notice of appointment "in the city or town," for keeping an office and record of dealers in milk "within their limits;" and for taking specimens of milk and for analysis; and for various penalties for sale of adulterated milk, etc. This act has passed through the various subsequent revisions of the statutes, and remained, with some changes and additions, a general permissive act as to all cities and towns, until the enactment of General Laws, 1896, Chap. 147, § 2, which provided as follows: "Sec. 2. The mayor and aldermen of any city, and the town council of any town, may annually elect one or more persons to be inspectors of milk therein, who shall be engaged to the faithful discharge of the duties of their office. Every such inspector shall give notice of his election by publishing notice thereof for two weeks in some newspaper published in the city or town for which he shall be appointed; or, if no newspaper be published therein, by posting up such notice in two or more public places in such city or town: Provided, that the mayor and aldermen of the city of Providence shall annually, in the month of August, elect such person or persons to be inspectors of milk and may, at any time during the year thereafter, fill by election any vacancy occurring by reason of death, resignation, absence from the city, or inability to act." By this act the election of an inspector of milk in the city of Providence became obligatory. Certain changes in this section, which are not important to the present consideration, have been made by subsequent revision, the latest change being that providing for biennial elections. (See Pub. Laws, Jan. 1912, Chap. 863.) (See Gen. Laws, 1909, Chap. 173, Sec. 8.)

It may be noted here that, since the provisions last above quoted, for the election of inspectors of milk, were obviously passed with a view to the preservation of health, it was most appropriate that the election of such inspectors should be confided to the respective town councils and boards of aldermen, which, as we have already seen, were and are ex officio local boards of health in their respective towns and [340] cities, thereby giving them power to elect a special health officer for the purpose of assisting them in the more efficient performance of one of their most important duties, viz.: in regulating the sale of milk and preventing the sale of adulterated milk.

Another step in the same direction was the provision for the employment of collectors of samples by such inspectors. This was brought about under Chap. 833, Pub. Laws of R. I., passed May 13, 1896, the first section of which reads as follows: "Section 1. Any inspector of milk of any town or city now in office or hereafter elected under authority of Chapter 147 of the General Laws, entitled 'Of Milk,' or of any act in amendment thereof, may employ, subject to the approval of the town council or the mayor and aldermen, one person as collector of samples, who shall have the same powers and be subject to the same duties and liabilities provided by law relative to the taking of specimens or samples, as an inspector of milk. All specimens or samples taken and retained by any such collector shall be delivered to such inspector, who shall have the same powers and duties relative to the same as in case of specimens or samples taken by himself. Such inspector at any time may discontinue the employment of any such collector, and subject to the approval aforesaid, employ another person in his stead. Such collector upon being employed shall be duly engaged to the faithful discharge of his duties before the city or town clerk, who shall keep a record thereof; and shall receive such salary as the mayor and aldermen or town council shall determine."

Special provision for the city of Providence was later made by Pub. Laws, Chap. 785, passed May 31, 1900, as follows: "Section 1. Any inspector of milk in the city of Providence now in office, or hereafter elected under authority of Chapter 147 of the General Laws, entitled 'Of Milk,' or of any act in amendment thereof or in addition thereto, may appoint, subject to the approval of the mayor and aldermen of said city of Providence, two persons as [341] collectors of samples, each of whom shall have the same powers and be subject to the same duties and liabilities provided by law relative to collectors authorized by the provisions of Chapter 333 of the Public Laws, entitled 'An act in amendment of and in addition to Chapter 147 of the General Laws, entitled 'Of Milk,' passed at the January Session, A. D. 1896.'

All specimens or samples taken and retained by any such collector shall be delivered to such inspector, who shall have the same powers and duties relative to the same as in case of specimens or samples taken by himself; such inspector may at any time dismiss any such collector, and, subject to the approval aforesaid, appoint another person in his stead. Each such collector, upon appointment, shall be duly engaged to the faithful discharge of his duties before the city clerk of said city, who shall keep a record thereof, and shall receive such salary as the mayor and aldermen of said city shall determine."

These provisions now appear without substantial change, in Gen. Laws, R. I., 1909, Chap. 173, § 9.

That a proceeding by way of petition for a mandamus is appropriate to compel the restoration to office of a rightful incumbent who has been wrongfully removed is amply supported by authority cited on behalf of the petitioner and is not questioned on behalf of the respondents. We see no occasion therefore to discuss this question. The sole question to be determined in this first case is whether, in view of the laws of this State, as above set forth, the city council of the city of Providence had the power to suspend the petitioner as collector of samples of milk from his office, pending the investigation of charges against him, by its resolution as above set forth.

The second case is an original petition in this court for a writ of certiorari. The petition sets forth the appointment and qualification of the petitioner as a collector of samples of milk, in somewhat greater detail, but substantially as above set forth, and his continuance in office until July 8, 1913, and his then exclusion from his office; the presentation [342] of the charges, already referred to, to the mayor on July 7, 1913, and the convening of the city council by the mayor on July 8, 1913, in special session for consideration of and action upon said charges; the presentation of said charges to said city council, at that meeting, and the passage of the joint resolution appointing the joint special committee on July 8, 1913, which said joint resolution has been hereinbefore fully set forth; that pursuant thereto the committee sat, from time to time, and heard and took evidence upon said charges, and on December 26, 1913, reported to the city council, and in their report found the petitioner guilty of misconduct in his official capacity and recommended that he be dismissed from his office. The petition further shows that on December 26, 1913, the city council voted to receive said report and on the same date passed a joint resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That Baylies R. Chace, Collector of Samples, be and he hereby is required to appear before the city council of the city of Providence on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of December, 1913, at seven o'clock P. M. in the chamber of the common council, city hall, and show cause why, relative to the charges against him accompanying the joint resolution of said city council No. 281, approved July 8, 1913, entitled 'resolution creating a joint special committee with certain powers and duties relative to charges against members of the milk department of the city,' and the proceedings of said committee and the evidence presented before said committee in support of and against said charges, and the report made by said committee to said city council on the twenty-sixth day of December, 1913, a copy of which report is hereunto annexed, he should not be removed from his said office of collector of samples of said city.

"And that said Baylies R. Chace be notified hereof by the city clerk causing a copy hereof with a copy of said report, duly certified by him, to be served by the city sergeant as soon as may be upon said Baylies R. Chace [343] by leaving the same with him or at his last and usual place of abode with some person living there."

The petition further shows that the petitioner, after being cited by said resolution to appear, protested in writing to said city council against its proposed action "for the reasons that he is a State or public and not a city or corporate officer, and that said city council is without jurisdiction in the premises."

The petition further shows that, December 30, 1913, the city council passed in concurrence the following resolution:

"Resolved, That after considering the evidence presented relative to the charges against Baylies R. Chace, Collector of Samples of Milk, accompanying joint resolution of the city council No. 281, approved July 8, 1913, the city council finds:

"First, that although the allegations of said charges numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4 are proven, yet being in effect charges of negligence, and said Chace as such collector having acted under the general directions of his superior officer, he is not considered to be sufficiently responsible to be held guilty of misconduct therefor;

"Second, that said Baylies R. Chace is guilty of the misconduct stated in said charges numbered 5, 6, 7 and 8, and in view charges numbered 5, 6, 7 and 8, copies whereof and of the bill of particulars to the same respectively being hereunto annexed;

"And Further Resolved, That, said Baylies R. Chace being guilty of the misconduct specified in said charges numbered 5, 6, 7 and 8, and in view thereof not being a fit person to hold said office of collector of samples, said Baylies R. Chace be and he hereby is removed from his said office of collector of samples of milk of the city of Providence;

"And Further Resolved, That said Baylies R. Chace be notified hereof by the city clerk causing a copy hereof, duly certified by him, to be served by the city sergeant as soon as may be upon said Baylies R. Chace by leaving the same with him or at his last and usual place of abode with some person living there."

[344] The charges and specifications upon which petitioner was so found guilty are stated in full in the petition and were annexed to the last quoted resolution; they consist of a corrupt proposition to a former inspector of milk involving prospective protection to milkmen and prospective collection of graft; and various charges of the receipt and collection of money graft or bribes from various named parties at different times during petitioner's incumbency of office; petitioner admits service upon him of a certified copy of said resolution and charges, December 31, 1913. He further alleges that he did not attend said meeting of the city council on December 30th when he was given an opportunity to appear and be heard; that no testimony was taken or presented at that meeting in relation to said charges; that all such testimony was taken before said committee and that there never has been any such testimony taken or presented by or before two-thirds of the said city council; petitioner then sets forth certain clauses of the city charter already herein set forth and referred to, and reiterates his claim that under the law of his appointment "his said office of collector of samples of milk is a State or public office, and not a corporate or municipal office," and that petitioner is a "State or public officer, and is not an officer of the city of Providence;" and in conclusion claims that the city council was without jurisdiction to remove him from office and prays for a writ of certiorari to bring up the record of said city council relating to the matter of his removal to the end that the same may be quashed.

It thus appears that three principal questions are raised: 1. Did the city council on July 8, 1913, have the power to suspend the petitioner from his office? 2. Did said city council, on December 30, 1913, have jurisdiction to remove the petitioner from his office? 3. As subsidiary to the second question, if the city council did have the power to remove, had it taken the proper procedure for his removal?

It may be conceded at the outset, that nowhere in the law have we found any power conferred upon the city council [345] in express terms to suspend the petitioner from his office. If such power exist, then, it must be as incident to the power to remove. The primary question, therefore, is as to the power to remove.

The broad claim of the petitioner that he is a "State or public officer" and not a "corporate or municipal officer," and that therefore the city council under its charter powers had no jurisdiction or authority over him, is not supported by authority, and is not in accord with the reasonable construction of the laws above cited. As we have seen above, boards of aldermen and town councils have from very early times been expressly authorized to act as local boards of health; and the mayor and aldermen of the city of Providence, composing one board (Charter, Section IV.) and exercising "the executive powers of said city generally, and the administration of police; together with such other powers as now are, or hereafter may be, conferred upon them by the laws of this State," . . . (Charter, Section VIII.) have for many years exercised the powers of a local board of health within and for the city of Providence. In the case of Pope Mfg. Co. v. Grangor, 21 R. I. 298, 301, 43 Atl. 590, this court said: "The board of aldermen is ex officio the board of health for said city. Gen. Laws, R. I. chap. 40, § 13. As a board of health they have sole charge of all matters within their jurisdiction, and when an appropriation has been made to enable them to discharge their duties, we fail to see any reason why they may not lawfully contract bills, in their discretion, to be paid out of such appropriation. They are sworn officials of the city; they constitute an important branch of the city government and are charged by law with the discharge of very important duties, especially when acting as a board of health, and it is certainly to be presumed that they will intelligently and faithfully perform such duties; and unless it clearly appears that a given act, like the one in question, is either beyond their jurisdiction or is a palpable abuse of their discretion, it is binding upon the city and cannot be questioned in a court of law. In the [346] case at bar the purchase was made by authority of a committee of the board of health; the bill was approved by said committee, by the superintendent of health, and also by the board itself; and there was money subject to the control of said board sufficient to pay the bill."

By reference to the various provisions of the statutes above quoted, whereby the offices of "inspector of milk" and "collector of samples of milk" were respectively created, it appears quite obvious that the election of these officers by town councils and boards of aldermen was authorized by the General Assembly for the purpose of assisting such local boards of health in the discharge of their duties in the important matter of regulating the sale of milk and its quality within their respective localities. The fact that the proper and efficient inspection of milk in the city of Providence, by means of which this most important article of food may be kept pure and healthful, within the city, is incidentally of interest to the inhabitants of the State who may happen to come into or sojourn within the city, or the fact that the preservation of the public health of one political division of the State is beneficial to the public at large, does not render either the inspector of milk or the collector of samples a "State or public officer" in any such sense as claimed by the petitioner. Such officer is primarily and essentially a local or municipal officer, and an assistant or servant of the local board of health. Each town and city is authorized to have its own inspector of milk appointed or elected by its local board of health and such local boards of health and their inspectors are entirely independent of each other and discharge purely local functions, having no jurisdiction outside their respective towns and cities. The collector of samples of milk is appointed by the inspector subject to the approval of the town council or of the mayor and aldermen, and is merely the assistant of the inspector, who may at any time revoke his appointment. As between the inspector and the collector, the latter is a mere employee or assistant without definite tenure of office, and may be [347] removed at the pleasure of the inspector; no cause need be assigned.

The petitioner apparently relies upon several cases in this state as authority for his position that he is a "State or public officer," but these cases do not support his position that such an officer may not be removed from office by action of the municipal authorities. The case of Gainer v. Dunn, 29 R. I. 232, 234, 69 Atl. 336, holding that the board of canvassers of the city of Providence is a "board of State officers, exercising a State function rather than a board of municipal officers exercising a municipal function," was considering the powers and jurisdiction of the board under a very elaborate special act creating the board and defining its powers and duties and its relation to elections; and had no relation to the question of the removal of any member of the board from office. The case of Newport v. Horton, 22 R. I. 196, 47 Atl. 312, 50 L.R.A. 330, had to do with the constitutional right of the General Assembly, in the exercise of the general police power of the State, to impose upon a municipality a police commission appointed by State authority. It had no relation to the question of the power of removal; by the act establishing a board of police commissioners for the city of Newport (Chap. 804, Pub. Laws, R. I. May 31, 1900), the board was to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, and it was provided in the first section that, "The members of said board may be removed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for such cause as he shall deem sufficient and shall express in the order of removal." It thereby became plain that the General Assembly intended that the Newport board of police commissioners should be appointed by and be amenable to State rather than to municipal authority. (See, also, Horton v. Newport, 27 R. I. 283, 8 Ann. Cas. 1097, 61 Atl. 759, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 512; Opinion to Governor, 22 R. I. 654, 657, 49 Atl. 36.)

It may be of interest to note at this point, in view of petitioner's reference to the Providence Police Commission, that the General Assembly, November 22, 1901, passed an [348] act (Chap. 930) to establish a board of police commissioners for the city of Providence, substantially like the Newport act, vesting the appointment of the three commissioners in the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, and providing for their removal "by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for such cause as he shall deem sufficient and shall express in the order of removal." This act remained in force until April 6, 1906, when by Chap. 1379, the law was so amended as to vest the appointment of such commissioners in the mayor, subject to the approval of the board of aldermen; and providing that, "The members of said board may be removed by said mayor, subject to the approval of said board of aldermen, for such cause as he shall deem sufficient and shall express in the order of removal." The powers and duties of the board of police commissioners are not substantially changed, and the board remains just as much a board of state officers as ever, but the power of appointment and removal has been vested in a municipal board.

Petitioner also cites a number of cases which are referred to and approved in the Newport cases and which are to the same general effect; but in none of them is the question of the power of removal considered. The action of the General Assembly in the matter of the Providence Police Commission in first taking the administration of police out of the hands of the city authorities and afterwards restoring it to the mayor and aldermen, shows a legislative recognition of the wisdom of the policy, which is most common, of delegating the control of boards of police commissioners and the administration of police, including appointments and removals, to municipal authorities; as was in fact originally done by the charter of this city above referred to in Section VIII Clause 1, and Section IX Clause 1, above quoted. It may be here noted also, that by the terms of the charter, Section IX Clause 4, the city council was empowered "to appoint an officer to be styled the chief of police and to prescribe his duties and fix his compensation;" and in clause [349] 9 of the same section the city council is empowered by a concurrent vote, two-thirds of the members elected to either board voting in the affirmative, to "remove all officers for misconduct or incapacity." It will not be questioned that the chief of police is a state or public officer in the sense in which the term is used in Newport v. Horton, 22 R. I. 196, 204, 47 Atl. 312, 50 L.R.A. 330, and yet the General Assembly saw fit to delegate the power of appointment and removal of the chief of police to the city council by the express terms of the charter. In the case of Norton v. Adams, 24 R. I. 97, 52 Atl. 688, the court had under consideration Chap. 964 of Pub. Laws, R. I. passed February 21, 1872, under which the town council of East Providence was authorized, among many other things, "to provide for a day and night police," and was also empowered to "remove all officers" appointed by the council, "for misconduct or incapacity, at any regular meeting." Pursuant to such authority an ordinance was adopted providing for a police force and a chief of police; it was held that this chief of police, appointed under the ordinance, "was not a mere police constable, but a member of a paid force, similar to those in cities, and the office of chief of police was thereby made a new and distinct town office." It will be noted that the enabling act Chap. 964 nowhere mentions a chief of police; yet it was not questioned in the case that the power of removal of "all officers" applied to the "chief of police;" but it appeared that no charges against him had been made and no opportunity given him to be heard, and so it was held that the attempted removal by the town council was illegal. We are of the opinion that, in the last cited case, it was perfectly clear and unquestionable that the power of removal of the chief of police by the town council was clearly delegated by the statute above quoted; just as we hold that it is equally clear that in the charter of the city of Providence as above quoted the power of removal of the chief of police was originally delegated to the city council, under the words "all officers." The petitioner stands in no better position [350] under the charter of the city of Providence, than did the chief of police under that charter, or the chief of police in East Providence in Norton v. Adams, supra. It has been seen that under the charter Section II, Clause 1, above quoted, "The administration of all the fiscal, prudential and municipal affairs of said city, with the conduct and government thereof, shall be vested in one principal officer to be styled the mayor; one council of ten persons to be styled the aldermen; and one council of forty persons to be styled the common council, together with such other magistrates or officers as are hereinafter specified, or by the laws of this State or the ordinances of the said city are, or hereafter may be, authorized or prescribed."

It is quite plain that when, under the statutes above quoted, provision was made in 1870 for the appointment of inspectors of milk, and later in 1896, such appointment of an inspector or inspectors of milk was made obligatory upon the mayor and aldermen of Providence, and that when, in 1896, provision was also made for the appointment of collectors of samples, and those appointments were made, the inspector of milk and his collectors of samples so appointed in the city of Providence became officers of the city within the words of the charter last above quoted, being "officers" . . . "by the laws of this State" . . . "hereafter" . . . "authorized or prescribed;" and therefore that they became and were subject to the express power of removal under Section IX Clause 9, above quoted.

Many cases from other jurisdictions are cited on behalf of the petitioner; but they have to do with a variety of local statutes, and discussion of them in detail is unnecessary, in view of the fact that none of them in any way affects what we consider to be the plain construction of our own statutes; nor is any case cited wherein it is held that a power of removal expressly delegated to municipal authority may not be lawfully exercised even where an officer, such as a chief of police, a policeman, a police commissioner, or a city marshal, deemed for certain purposes to be a state or public [§51] officer, appointed in accordance with a State law and whose duties are strictly defined by such law, is nevertheless by express terms of a city charter removable upon proper proceedings before a municipal body such as a town council, a board of aldermen or a city council. See Lowrey v. Central Falls, 23 R. I. 354, 50 Atl. 639; Norton v. Adams, 24 R. I. 97, 52 Atl. 688; Andrews v. King, 77 Me. 224, 231.

As to the distinction between local officers of a town or city or other local subdivision of the State, and state officers subject to impeachment under the constitution, see Lowrey v. Central Falls, 23 R. I. 354, 50 Atl. 639; In re Opinion of Justices, 167 Mass. 599, 46 N. E. 118; Ex p. Wiley, 54 Ala. 226, 228; State v. Dillon, 90 Mo. 229, 233, 2 S. W. 417; State v. Hewitt, 3 S. D. 187, 197, 52 N. W. 875, 44 Am. St. Rep. 788, 16 L.R.A. 413; State v. Smith, 6 Wash. 496-498, 33 Pac. 974, wherefrom it clearly appears that officers of the class to which the petitioner belongs are not subject to impeachment under our constitution or under similar constitutions in other states.

Ann. Cas. 1916C.—80.

But the petitioner contends that he is not subject to the power of removal vested by the charter in the city council, because the statute, which creates his office (See Gen. Laws, 1909, Chap. 173, § 9), provides that the inspector who appoints him may at any time revoke his appointment; and petitioner thereupon claims that such power of revocation is exclusive of all other methods of removal. The argument in support of this position is not convincing; no cases are cited which in anywise support it. The power of revocation given to the inspector is solely for his benefit so that he can at any time dismiss his assistant without being obliged to assign any cause or give any hearing; it might be simply because they had ceased to be harmonious, or the collector had become personally disagreeable to the inspector, without in any way failing to perform the duties required by law. But this power of revocation or dismissal is in no way inconsistent or in conflict with or exclusive of the power of removal for cause vested in the city council. On the contrary the very reasons why the inspector might [§52] wish to retain his collector in office might furnish the basis of charges leading up to his removal for cause by the city council.

Having thus far determined that the city council had power and jurisdiction to remove the petitioner "for misconduct or incapacity" the question next arises whether the city council could suspend the petitioner from office pending the investigation of charges against him. It has already been shown that the charges preferred against the petitioner were of a very serious character, sufficient, if proved, to warrant his dismissal from office.

It is contended for the petitioner that no such power of suspension, pending charges, existed, and in support of such contention he cites from Throop, Public Officers, p. 304, Sec. 404, as follows: "The weight of authority in this country sustains the doctrine, that the power to suspend an officer does not follow from the grant of power to remove him." But the cases cited in support of this proposition in Throop, and cited also on petitioner's brief, fall far short of establishing any such general proposition.

The case of Tyrrell v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 536, is not in point here. In that case the common council had power by charter to expel a member for disorderly conduct, and it was held that receiving bribes for his official influence and votes was disorderly conduct on the part of a member, within the meaning of the charter. It appeared that the relator (in a motion for mandamus) after a hearing before the common council had been found guilty on charges of bribery and corruption and had been removed from office; that a new election had been ordered; that he had been reflected and sworn in according to law; and that upon his appearing and taking his seat in the common council that body passed a resolution directing that the president should not appoint the relator on any committee, that the clerk should not call his name among the list of members on any action, vote or proceeding, and that he (the relator) should not be allowed to take any part in any debate on [353] any question before the board. It was held that his original conviction and expulsion was proper; but that it did not disqualify him from reelection; that if reelected, he could not be expelled a second time for the same offence, the council by its expulsion having exhausted its power under the charter; that being reelected and in office, there was no warrant for such suspension as was attempted under the resolution; on p. 544, the court said: "It only remains to be considered, whether the action of the common council in resolving that 'the president of council be directed not to appoint Tyrrell on any committee, and that the clerk do not call his name among the list of members in any action, vote, or proceeding of the council, and that he be not allowed to take part in any debate on any question which may come before the board of aldermen,' is warranted by law. We think it entirely clear that it is not. This proceeding amounts to a suspension of the relator from the exercise of his official duties, as a member of that body. It leaves his constituents unrepresented and without remedy. Expulsion creates a vacancy that can be supplied by a new election. Suspension from the duties of the office creates no vacancy; the seat is filled, but the occupant is silenced. The charter vests no such power in the council; it would be extraordinary if it did. The power is to expel, not to suspend."

We have quoted this case at some length because it has often been cited (as in this case) to the general proposition that the power to expel does not include or imply a power to suspend. It is not an authority to that effect. The extent of its authority is, in strictness, that the council had exhausted its power of expulsion, that it had no power to expel at the time when it attempted to suspend, and that the suspension would result in leaving a political constituency unrepresented and without remedy. It does not go to the extent of saying that a suspension, pending charges and while the right to expel still existed, would not be proper.

The case of Gregory v. New York, 113 N. Y. 416, 21 N. E. 119, 3 L.R.A. 854, also fails to support the petitioner's contention. There the [354] plaintiff was an inspector of excise employed by the commissioners of excise; they had full power to remove him at their own pleasure, without charges; they did attempt to suspend him without pay, and he tendered his services from time to time and finally sued for his salary. It was held that the power to remove from office does not necessarily and in all cases include the power to suspend; that the suspension in this case was improper in view of the duties required; that the inspector should have been removed; and that he was entitled to recover his pay. The court says, p. 420: "We do not go to the extent of saying that in no conceivable case can the power to suspend be inferred from a grant of the power to remove. There may be cases where such an inference, arising from the general scope and nature of the act granting the power, would be so strong as to compel recognition. We think there is no such inference to be drawn in the case before us." The case of Metaker v. Neally, 41 Kan. 122, 21 Pac. 206, 13 Am. St. Rep. 269, likewise does not support the petitioner. There the mayor attempted to suspend the city engineer, and the city marshal, acting in concert with the mayor, forcibly deprived the petitioner of his office room, books, etc. It was found that the mayor had no power to remove the city engineer from office, and that the power to remove rested in the mayor and council; that therefore the mayor could neither remove nor suspend. The court says, on p. 123: "We can readily believe that the greater power to remove might include the lesser one to suspend, but we have failed to notice any instance where the power to remove is not conceded that the authority to suspend is admitted. In this instance the plaintiff was not suspended pending any examination of charges against him, which if found true would have been grounds for a removal; but he was suspended without charges against him, and without notice."

Some other cases cited for petitioner apparently upon this point have no bearing.

We find a more comprehensive and discriminating statement of the law upon this point in 29 Cyc. p. 1405, as [355] follows: "Where no express power to suspend has been granted, the courts do not recognize that the power is included within the arbitrary power to remove, for the exercise of the power to suspend will produce an interregnum in office. The ends of discipline in such a case may be sufficiently subserved by the exercise of the power of removal, and do not require the recognition of a power to suspend. But where the power of removal is limited to cause, the power to suspend, made use of as a disciplinary power pending charges, is regarded as included within the power of removal."

The earlier portion of the above statement refers by note to the cases last above cited; while the last sentence is supported by the cases next referred to.

In State v. Police Com'rs, 16 Mo. App. 48, 50, the court held that the commissioners had authority pending a trial on charges to suspend the chief of police, saying, p. 50: "The suspension of an officer, pending his trial for misconduct, so as to tie his hands for the time being, seems to be universally accepted as a fair, salutary, and often necessary incident of the situation. His retention, at such a time, of all the advantages and opportunities afforded by official position may enable and encourage him, not only to persist in the rebellious practices complained of, but also to seriously embarrass his triers in their approaches to the ends of justice. In the absence of any express limitation to the contrary, and none has been shown, we are of opinion that, in cases where guiltiness of the offence charged will involve a dismissal from office, there is, on general principles, no arbitrary or improper exercise of a supervisory authority in a suspension of the accused pending his trial in due and proper form."

In State v. Megaarden, 85 Minn. 41, 88 N. W. 412, 89 Am. St. Rep. 531, where it was found that the governor had express power to remove a sheriff for malfeasance or nonfeasance, it was held that the governor had an implied power to suspend pending the hearing of charges. The court quotes with hearty approval the [356] language above quoted from 16 Mo. App. 50; and the same was again approved in Blackwell v. Thayer, 101 Mo. App. 661, 665, 74 S. W. 375. See, also, Bringgold v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 202, 208, 67 Pac. 612; Maben v. Rosser, 24 Okla. 588, 607, 103 Pac. 674; Shannon v. Portsmouth, 54 N. H. 183.

In view of these authorities and of the nature and circumstances of the case at bar, and in view also of the express power of removal conferred upon the city council, we are clearly of the opinion that said city council had the power to suspend the petitioner pending the investigation of the charges against him, and that such suspension was within its jurisdiction.

The final question for our determination is whether or not the city council has taken the proper procedure for the removal of the petitioner. It appears from a record of proceedings which is certified by the city clerk and is before us upon the petition for a writ of certiorari, that prior to June 30, 1913, some investigation of the milk department had been made by the aldermanic committee on milk upon certain complaints and that a report thereof was made to the board of aldermen by the committee on milk recommending the formulation of charges and the appointment of a joint special committee to try the questions involved; consequent upon this report and recommendation, which was received and approved by the board of aldermen, June 30, 1913, special meetings of both branches of the city council were duly called by the mayor and were held July 8, 1913, at which time the several joint resolutions herein set forth suspending Scott, the inspector, and the petitioner, and appointing a joint special committee for the investigation of the charges presented against them were duly passed in concurrence and approved by the mayor. It further appears that this joint special committee of investigation, after due notice to the petitioner and other parties in interest, met as directed by the resolution, on July 14, 1913, and, after being duly organized, proceeded with their duties; and that the petitioner and other parties in interest were [357] present and were represented by counsel; that said committee proceeded to hear testimony relative to the charges both in support thereof and in defence thereto, and continued to hear such testimony at forty successive hearings until October 14, 1913, when the testimony was closed; and the petitioner was given full opportunity to present all such testimony in his defence as he saw fit to introduce (and there was a great deal of it); that after the close of the testimony full opportunity was given at three successive hearings for the argument of counsel, and that the petitioner's counsel was fully heard; that thereafter the committee took much time for consideration and finally reported fully to the city council, accompanying the report with a transcript of all the proceedings and the evidence, and its findings thereon, and its recommendations, in accordance with the resolution of appointment. They found the petitioner not guilty of the first four charges of misconduct with certain specifications of negligence and inefficiency, for the reason that, while they believed that the facts enumerated were proved, they did not believe that he was the person who should be held responsible therefor; and they found him guilty of the remaining charges involving graft and corrupt conduct in office, and recommended his removal for misconduct. This report was presented to a special meeting of the common council duly called and held for the special purpose of receiving the report, on December 26, 1913, at which thirty-six members were present; the report with the accompanying transcript of the testimony and exhibits was presented, the report was read and the same, with the transcript of testimony and the exhibit evidence, was ordered to be communicated to the board of aldermen; and the resolution above set forth requiring the petitioner to appear before the city council on December 30, 1913, to show cause why he should not be removed from office was duly passed, the roll call showing thirty-six members voting in the affirmative and none in the negative.

[358] The board of aldermen on the same day met in special meeting duly called and held for the same purpose, the mayor and all of the aldermen (10) being present, the said report with the transcript of evidence and exhibits, being duly communicated to the board from the common council, was upon motion received by the board and the report was read by the clerk. The board then passed in concurrence the resolution requiring the petitioner to appear before the city council on December 30, 1913, as hereinbefore set forth, to show cause why he should not be removed from office, the roll call showing ten votes in the affirmative and none in the negative. Both the common council and the board of aldermen adjourned to meet on Tuesday, December 30, 1913, at 6:45 o'clock P. M. It appears that the city sergeant duly served upon the petitioner a copy of said report and of said resolution on December 27, 1913. It further appears that the petitioner having filed his written protest as set forth in his petition, the same was presented to the common council at its meeting of December 30th, and was read and received and ordered communicated to the board of aldermen; that said protest was thereupon communicated to said board, and was there read and received; that both branches of said city council met according to adjournment on December 30th; that they went into convention for the purpose of hearing said petitioner and Walter O. Scott, inspector of milk, in accordance with said resolutions of December 26th; that the convention met at seven o'clock P. M., in the chamber of the common council, the time and place provided in said resolution for the purpose of hearing said petitioner and said Scott; that there was present the mayor and ten aldermen, being the entire board of aldermen, and thirty-six members of the common council out of a total number of thirty-eight, being much more than "two-thirds of the members elected;" that the mayor, as presiding officer of said convention, after the clerk had read the resolution requiring the appearance of said Chace and Scott to show cause, etc., inquired if said [359] Chace or his counsel or Scott or his counsel were present and ready to proceed; and it appears that they failed to respond, and that some time was allowed to elapse awaiting their appearance; that they or either of them did not appear and the joint session at 7:15 P. M., dissolved; the board of aldermen then reassembled in session in its own chamber, and the common council reassembled in session in its chamber; whereupon the joint resolution last above quoted finding said Chace guilty of certain misconduct and removing him from his said office was presented to the common council and was read and passed, there being present thirty-five members out of a total of thirty-eight, all of said thirty-five voting in the affirmative, and none voting in the negative, it thus appearing that more than two-thirds of the members elected voted in the affirmative; the said resolution was then forthwith communicated to the board of aldermen, then in session, the mayor and all of the aldermen (10) being present, and said resolution was passed in concurrence, all of the aldermen voting in the affirmative, it thus appearing that more than the required two-thirds voted in the affirmative, and none in the negative. No question is raised by the petitioner as to the regularity of any of the meetings or of the proceedings at such meetings of either branch of the city council, or of the convention; and so far as the record before us discloses they all appear to have been regular and lawful meetings.

But the petitioner strenuously contends that he was tried before a committee; that he was found guilty by the committee; that the city council simply accepted the report of the committee, and acted thereon without any evidence being placed before it; that no evidence was taken before the city council itself; that he had the right to have the witnesses for and against him produced and examined before the city council itself, or at least before two-thirds of the members; that the city council had no power to delegate to a committee composed of some of its members its powers to try and convict him and to remove him from office; and, therefore, [360] that the action of the city council in finally removing him from office was taken without any lawful hearing and was null and void.

There was no delegation of power to the committee to try and sentence the petitioner; the resolution appointing the committee defined its powers, as follows: "Said joint special committee shall hear and receive the evidence presented in support of and against the accompanying charges against two officers of the milk department of the city, namely, Walter O. Scott, Inspector of Milk, and Baylies R. Chace, Collector of Samples, which charges, as recommended by the committee on milk to the board of aldermen, have been formulated by the law department; and said joint special committee shall cause said evidence to be taken stenographically, transcribed and with any documentary, book or other exhibit evidence in any form received by said committee to be filed with either branch of the city council, and therewith said committee shall submit to the city council its report relative to such charges and evidence, its findings thereon and its recommendations, for such further action as the city council may determine. Said committee may cause the transcribed evidence to be printed, and printed copies thereof to be also filed as aforesaid for the use of the city council, and may make its report in print."

The record, already briefly recited, shows that the committee explicitly obeyed these directions, had the testimony taken stenogra-phically by sworn stenographers and transcribed, and that all this evidence so transcribed was submitted to both branches of the city council with the committee's report; that both the original transcript and printed copies thereof had for four days been before the city council as a whole at the time (December 30th) when its meeting in joint session was held for the purpose of giving the petitioner a hearing and when he failed and refused to appear and to avail himself of the opportunity; and the final joint resolution of the city council passed in concurrence December [361] 30, 1913, after such joint session and petitioner's failure to appear, recites "That after considering the evidence presented relative to the charges against Baylies R. Chace, Collector of Samples of Milk, accompanying joint resolution of the city council No. 281, approved July 8, 1913, the city council finds," etc., as hereinabove fully set forth. The only powers of the committee were to hear evidence and report its findings and recommendations, "for such further action as the city council may determine." The petitioner was entitled to be heard before the city council as a whole upon all the evidence before them; the city council gave him the opportunity to be heard, he refused on the ground that they had no jurisdiction over him. It is not for us to assume that the city council would not have given him a full and fair hearing; nor can we assume as the petitioner urges us to do that the members did not fully and fairly consider the evidence as it was their duty to do, and as they had full opportunity to do, and as the recital in the final resolution of removal shows that they did. If the petitioner had desired to insist that the members should more fully consider the evidence before them, he had opportunity, by himself or his counsel, to have argued at length thereon and to have called their attention to any and all parts thereof in detail as he did at the final hearings before the committee.

As to the contention of the petitioner that all of the witnesses should have been produced and all of the evidence should have been taken in presence of the entire city council as a body, we find no ground either in reason or authority to support such contention. It is quite customary in all kinds of investigation of matters to be finally acted upon by legislative bodies, that committees of investigation are appointed to receive evidence and to report the same to the legislative body for its action thereon.

Thus, in 2 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, p. 1351, § 615 (McQuillin Municipal Ordinances, § 123): "Provision is usually made in the organic law of the corporation, or [362] by ordinance or other regulations, duly adopted in pursuance thereof, for the creation and constitution of committees, to assist the legislative body in the performance of its proper duties, as in the collection of facts and information which are generally embodied in reports. This method of performing portions of the public business is not forbidden and has often been sanctioned by judicial decisions. The rule appears to be well established that certain municipal duties may be performed by agents or committees. Thus, the council may refer applications for the location or alteration of streets to a committee to examine into the matter and report to the council. So, where the council is the sole judge of the election of its own members, upon the institution of a contest, a committee may be appointed to take testimony and report to the council."

Again, in Throop on Public Officers, § 385: "Rights of accused at trial or hearing. As we have already shown, where the statute requires, expressly or impliedly, a hearing or trial, as distinguished from a mere 'explanation,' the charges must be proven by testimony, and the accused has the right to cross-examine the witnesses produced to sustain them, to produce witnesses in his defence, and to be assisted by counsel. It is not essential, that the testimony should be taken before all or a quorum of the members of the board, which is to act upon it; it may be taken by a stenographer, in the presence and under the direction of one of the members, and afterwards written out and submitted to the board, so as to form the basis of the judgment of the board; and the validity of the removal is not affected by the fact that the member, under whose direction it was taken, was not present, when it was so submitted and acted upon by the board; or that he had then ceased to be a member of the board."

Again in Section 393, Throop says: "And the corporation can lawfully appoint a committee to examine into the complaint, and to receive evidence and report thereupon and may remove the officer upon the report and evidence."

[363] Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. p. 161: "Each house must also be allowed to proceed in its own way in the collection of such information as may seem important to a proper discharge of its functions, and whenever it is deemed desirable that witnesses should be examined, the power and authority to do so is very properly referred to a committee, with any such powers short of final legislative or judicial action as may seem necessary or expedient in the particular case."

And it is not because, in all cases, there is a definite statute or ordinance, expressly authorizing the reference to a committee in the particular instance under discussion but many of the decisions rest upon the ground of general convenience or expediency in the practical conduct of matters cognizable by legislative bodies.

In Salmon v. Haynes, 50 N. J. L. 97, 11 Atl. 151, involving an election contest where the common council of Newark was sole judge of the election of its members, the court says (p. 99): "The mayor first contends that the common council had no authority to appoint the committee, or to empower them to do the acts comprised in the resolution which authorized them to expend money for a stenographer. The common council, by the charter, is made the sole judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members. They were thus required to adjudicate upon the contest raised by O'Connor's petition. The duty of making that adjudication could not be delegated to any committee. But that is not what the common council did in this case. The duty imposed on the committee was simply to take testimony, and to report the facts they found, with the testimony taken. This is the well-known course of proceeding in every body having power to judge of the election of its own members, in case an election is contested. No other course seems practicable, and no injury is thereby done to the contestants, for the adjudication is made, upon the facts and testimony presented, by the whole body. In my judgment, the authority to appoint the committee [364] and to direct it to do the acts required by the resolution was clear."

We see no reason why the procedure of reference to a committee to take testimony and report the facts approved in the last quoted case in the matter of a contested election of a member, is not equally applicable upon principle in the case at bar.

Few cases are cited by either party to the case at bar which directly apply to the point here under discussion, and such has been the diligence of counsel that we presume they have cited all they could find. The case most nearly covering this disputed point is that of Osgood v. Nelson, 41 L. J. Q. B. (Eng.) 329, a final decision by the House of Lords and a leading English case; where it appeared that by virtue of a certain act of Parliament the chief clerk of the London (City) Small Debts Court was to be appointed by the mayor, aldermen and commons, and it was lawful for them, in case of the clerk's inability or misbehaviour, or for any other cause which might appear reasonable to them, the mayor, aldermen, and commons, to remove such clerk. Upon charges of misconduct in office against said clerk, which were brought before that body, elsewhere in the opinion called the "Court of Common Council," the matter was referred to a committee for them to inquire into it and report upon it. The committee gave several hearings at which all parties in interest were present, heard the testimony of all the witnesses who were produced, had the same stenographically taken and heard arguments of counsel; the transcript of the evidence and proceedings was before the committee and was carefully considered; and the committee reported to the council that they found the clerk guilty as charged. The evidence taken before the committee was printed and distributed to the members of the council, the report with transcript of evidence was duly filed and the accused clerk was duly notified and furnished with a copy of the report and allowed to inspect and take copies of the evidence, and he was ordered to show cause on a certain [365] fixed date before the Court of Common Council (equivalent to our city council) why he should not be removed from office. Further time was given at his request, he finally appeared by counsel and was heard; and thereupon after deliberation, the following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved, that in the opinion of this court the duties of chief clerk or registrar of the Sheriffs' Court have not been properly discharged by Mr. Osgood.

"Resolved, that this court having carefully considered the evidence as to the manner in which the duties of the office of chief clerk or registrar of the Sheriffs' Court, have been discharged by Mr. Osgood, is of opinion that reasonable cause exists for his removal from his said office, and this court doth hereby remove him accordingly."

Among other questions raised and determined, which need not be here stated, substantially the same point, now under consideration in the case at bar, was raised, viz.: that the power of motion had not been properly exercised because the inquiry had been conducted before a small portion of the corporation, and the corporation was not entitled to delegate to a select body, such as the clerk's committee, the authority conferred upon them (p. 333); in the earlier stages of this case this contention was overruled in the Court of Queen's Bench (p. 334 by Cockburn, C. J.); in the Exchequer Chamber the judgment of the court of Queen's Bench was affirmed; on error to the House of Lords, judgment of the Exchequer Chamber was affirmed. Upon the point here under discussion, the House of Lords speaking through Martin, B., said, p. 335: "The next objection taken was that motion did not take place, as the law required, on the authority of the lord mayor, aldermen and commons, but by delegation. Now, in our opinion, there was no delegation at all—nothing of the kind. What was done was, that a complaint having been made to the body which had control in the matter, viz.: the mayor, aldermen and commons of the city of London, as to the conduct of Mr. Osgood, it was referred by them to a committee, [366] which seems to have been long used in the Corporation of London, known as the 'Officers' and Clerks' Committee; and what they were directed to do was to make enquiry, with reference to the alleged complaint, to take evidence and to ascertain the truth of it, not for the purpose of that committee coming to any judgment or decision themselves, but for the purpose of their report being submitted to the mayor, aldermen and commons, in order that they might come to a judgment upon it. The argument of the learned counsel is erroneous in point of fact. That has not taken place which they allege to have taken place, and therefore there was no delegation."

And p. 340, Lord Colonsay says: "I quite agree with the observation made by the learned Baron, that there was no violation of the rule of delegation in this case. The mode adopted was the mode in which such enquiries are ordinarily considered, and necessarily conducted by such a tribunal. What was the course which was stated to have been requisite? It was that after this committee had made their report, if they did make such a report, there should have been an assembling of the common council, there should have been a prosecutor appointed, and there should have been a new trial, with all the formalities of a criminal trial, before they could have arrived at a conclusion. But the committee of enquiry into this matter, having made their enquiry in the ordinary way, having collected their evidence in the ordinary way, and allowed the party who had been present at the collecting of that evidence, to state his case by counsel, I cannot conceive a more fair mode of proceeding."

The criticism of the case of Osgood v. Nelson, supra, which has been attempted by petitioner's counsel, that it is of no weight as authority here, because the power of the Court of Common Council of London to remove officers may have been derived from prescription or custom or other obscure source is not warranted by the facts; since it clearly appears at large in the opinions, that its powers of amotion were derived from express statutory authority; and its [367] procedure was fully approved as having afforded a full and fair opportunity to the officer charged with misconduct to be heard in his defence.

Certain other cases are cited on behalf of the respondents, relating to certain rules of police commissions in New York City, where by such rules, adopted by the commissioners under their general discretionary powers to adopt rules for the conduct of the police department, it was provided that upon charges made against a member of the police, testimony might be taken before one commissioner or a deputy, and reported to the commissioner or board of commissioners, who should thereupon give a hearing to the accused party, and who alone could convict and punish. It has been frequently held that such rules were a proper exercise of discretion vested in the commissioners under the law, and that the evidence so taken before one commissioner could properly be submitted to and considered and acted upon by the full board of commissioners, although the witnesses were not produced before them. See People v. Board of Police, 93 N. Y. 97, 103; People v. Board of Police, 98 N. Y. 332, 335; People v. Board of Police, 99 N. Y. 676, 2 N. E. 151; People v. Greene, 183 N. Y. 483, 486, 76 N. E. 614.

We cite these cases simply to show that it has been found to be a reasonable rule, in relation to inquiries by a board of public officials, into charges of misconduct, that the evidence may be taken before one of such officials and reported to the board for their action; and that it is not the right of the accused person under such circumstances, that all of the witnesses must be examined before the full board. Such a recognition of what is reasonable in such cases, is of some weight in determining whether the petitioner in this case has had a fair opportunity to be heard in his defence.

We find no case cited on behalf of petitioner which supports his contention upon this point.

In Jacksonville v. Allen, 25 Ill. App. 54, the procedure seems to be substantially the same as in the case at bar up to the time that the officer under investigation was [368] notified to be present at a meeting of the city council if he saw fit and be heard in his defence. The case shows that he did appear and was not given the opportunity which the notice to appear offered him. It was the failure of the council to give him this opportunity which was the deciding factor in the case. The court expressly makes this the issue, at page 56: "That issue, strictly speaking, was whether the appellee was discharged without a hearing before the city council, and this leads to a statement of the real matter in controversy, which is whether the city council has power to discharge a regular policeman without giving him an opportunity to be heard in his defence." The test in this case is not, did the council in person take the testimony against the officer under investigation but, did the officer under investigation have an opportunity to be heard by the council in his defence.

In Chicago v. People, 210 Ill. 84, 71 N. E. 816, a trial board was expressly provided by statute. The trial was held before a board improperly constituted. This was of course illegal. The case also shows that the relator was not given an opportunity to be heard in his defence. The case has no bearing upon the question now under discussion.

In Andrews v. King, 77 Me. 224, the irregularities upon which the court bases its decision were that the charter required that the hearing be by the mayor and aldermen; that the hearing was held by the aldermen alone without the mayor and was not according to law; it also appeared that there was no determination or judgment upon the facts before sentence was passed. No hearing was had before a committee and the question here under discussion was not raised.

Charles v. Hoboken, 27 N. J. L. 203, is simply an authority to the same effect that if the power of removal is vested in the mayor and council, it may not be exercised by the council alone.

People v. Hamilton, 84 App. Div. 369, 82 N. Y. S. 884, involved the attempted removal of a docket comparing clerk in the office [369] of the county clerk of New York County. The proceedings for removal were taken under statutory authority before a deputy clerk who heard the evidence and himself had power to remove. He reported the evidence to the county clerk, who had not heard the witnesses; and who made an order of removal giving him any opportunity to be heard. The removal was held to be illegal on grounds which have no special bearing here. It was held that the deputy clerk who heard the evidence should have acted in the matter of removal.

No case in this state has passed directly upon this question. In Maroney v. Pawtucket, 19 R. I. 3, 31 Atl. 265, it appeared that charges of misconduct having been made against the petitioner, an assessor of taxes of the city of Pawtucket, the city council appointed a committee "to give a full, fair and impartial hearing to all parties in interest and to report to the city council the results of such hearing." The committee made a report to the city council and the testimony taken by the committee was read to the board of aldermen and common council assembled in joint convention. On the same day the city council passed a vote finding the petitioner guilty of misconduct in office and removing him from his office. Under the charter of the city of Pawtucket, "The city council may by concurrent vote of three-fifths of the members elected to each board remove from office for incapacity or misconduct any officer elected or appointed by them." The court said: "Though notice was given to the petitioner of the taking of the testimony before the committee of the city council appointed for that purpose, the record does not disclose any notice to him of the proceeding before the council for his removal from office, so that he could be heard on the question of his removal. Without such opportunity to be heard the proceeding was not such a trial as is contemplated by Clause 7 of the charter of Pawtucket. For this reason, we are of the opinion that the proceeding must be quashed." It will be noted that the court does not condemn that part [370] of the procedure which involves the taking of testimony before a committee of the city council, but places its objection to the proceedings solely upon the fact that the petitioner had no opportunity to appear before the council and be heard on the question of his removal after the committee had reported; an opportunity which was given to the petitioner in the case at bar and of which he refused to take advantage.

We are clearly of the opinion that the method of procedure adopted in this case was a reasonable and proper method, on the part of the city council, of gathering the evidence and bringing it before that body for its consideration and determination. It is not to be expected or required that a body like the city council, which has under the charter important legislative and administrative functions in the conduct of the affairs of the city and the members of which are men of business necessarily requiring time for their own affairs, should sit as a whole for the purpose of listening to all the witnesses produced in the course of a protracted investigation of this character; while it is proper that they should do so, if they see fit, in our opinion, the method of reference to a committee, to take the evidence and report, was an orderly and proper method well calculated to arrive at just results and in fact gave to the petitioner a better opportunity to present all of his evidence and to be heard at length thereon than would have been possible if the whole city council had sat as a body during all of the forty-three hearings. The language of Cockburn, C. J., quoted in the case of Osgood v. Nelson (supra) 41 L. J. Q. B. (Eng.) 329, at p. 333, is quite appropriate in this connection: "It is true that the Court of Common Council did not themselves hear the evidence, but that arose from the circumstances of the case. Where there is a tribunal of some 360 persons, you cannot expect them to sit down altogether whilst a long enquiry of several days goes on. But the facts of the case must be submitted in some way to those who have decided it; and the evidence having been printed and circulated [371] amongst all the members of the council, we must take it that those gentlemen did not come to the council to discharge so important a function as that of determining on the dismissal from his office of a gentleman like Mr. Osgood without having examined that evidence so submitted to them."

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that although the respondents have brought before this court the numerous printed volumes of testimony taken before the committee, and which were placed before the members of the city council prior to the time when the petitioner had his opportunity to appear and be heard, such testimony is no part of the record before this court, although certified with the record by the city clerk. It is true that it has been held by this court that, upon proceedings in certiorari, the evidence taken before the inferior tribunal forms no part of the record proper and that "the purpose of certiorari is to correct errors of law, and not to review findings of fact." Maroney v. Pawtucket, 19 R. I. 3, 31 Atl. 265; Smith v. Burrillville, 19 R. I. 61, 63; 31 Atl. 578, and in accordance with these views we have not examined said testimony with any purpose to review findings of fact. But it is apparent from the allegations of the petition that the charges against the petitioner were of a substantial character, and that if they were found to be true they furnished ample ground for the action of the city council in his removal from office for misconduct; and it is further apparent from an examination of the record which does include the report of the committee and all the proceedings before the city council that there was material evidence of a substantial character, in support of the charges, taken before the committee and by them placed before and considered by the city council, upon which the city council was justified in finding the defendant guilty. We have looked into the proceedings so far as to assure ourselves that the city council, in exercising its jurisdiction of removal acted upon serious and substantial grounds, supported by competent evidence, and that there was just and reasonable cause for their [372] action. Keenan v. Goodwin, 17 R. I. 649, 24 Atl. 148; O'Brien v. Pawtucket, 20 R. I. 49, 37 Atl. 302, 530; Osgood v. Nelson, supra. When, after due notice to the petitioner, the city council as a whole met in special session for the express purpose of giving to the petitioner the hearing to which he was entitled under the general principles recognized by all the cases cited, it is to be presumed that they were acting in good faith and that they intended to give him the fullest opportunity to be heard; he might then, if he saw fit, either by counsel or individually have criticised the testimony and pointed out its weaknesses, or mistakes if any; he might have offered material assistance to the members thereof in the examination and consideration of the testimony. If he was not satisfied that they had given all necessary examination to the evidence before them, then was his opportunity to see that they did so, and to place the matter of his defence before them in such light that they would be compelled to give it consideration. But he saw fit to refuse the opportunity, relying upon his general protest denying their jurisdiction; and it is too late for him now to complain of the result. We are not to assume, as the petitioner urges us to do, that the city council did not examine or consider the evidence submitted by the committee; rather, in view of the plain terms of the final resolution, we are to assume that they did consider the evidence in accordance with their duty; and did make their findings in accordance therewith. We are of the opinion that the city council did all that it was legally bound to do in the premises and that no ground exists for any interference with their action.

The appeal from the judgment of the Superior Court denying the writ of mandamus (in the first case) is dismissed, the judgment of the Superior Court is affirmed and that case is remanded to the Superior Court for further proceedings.

The petition for a writ of certiorari (in the second case) is denied and dismissed.

NOTE.

Power of Body Having Authority to Remove Public Officer to Appoint Committee to Conduct Hearing.

The reported case holds that a body vested with the power to remove a public officer may appoint a committee to conduct the hearing and take the evidence, and may base its own action on the evidence reported by that committee. That holding finds support in Osgood v. Nelson, L. R. 5 H. L. (Eng.) 636, 41 L. J. Q. B. 329, discussed at length in the reported case, and in the recent case of State v. Milwaukee, 157 Wis. 505, 147 N. W. 50, wherein, in reviewing the removal of a tax commissioner by a municipal council, the court said: "The relator claims he was denied a hearing in two respects: First, because the evidence was not taken before the common council, but before a committee thereof, and second, because he was denied the right to be heard by the common council by attorney before it acted upon the report of the committee. The first challenge of the regularity of the proceedings we hold not well taken. It is a familiar practice in legal proceedings to refer the taking of evidence to a referee or person other than the court and to report such evidence as well as the conclusions of the referee or person taking the evidence thereon to the court to act upon. Evidence so taken, reported, and acted upon by the court must in contemplation of law be deemed taken before the court. The necessity of so taking testimony by courts is quite apparent to those conversant with judicial proceedings. Much more so was there a necessity for the appointment of a committee to take the evidence in this proceeding. Over four hundred printed, pages of testimony are reported to this court, the taking of which, with intermissions, required weeks of time. It was not practicable for all the members of the common council to devote so much time to it. All the evidence taken was read to the common council before it acted upon the report of the committee. It must therefore, in contemplation of law, be deemed to have been taken before the common council, and that in this respect the proceeding was regular." In Butter v. Burke (Vt.) 93 Atl. 842, the holding in the reported case was discussed without a definite decision thereon, the court saying: "The case against the commissioners was evidently presented to the city council on the theory that the evidence taken by the aldermanic committee as shown by the transcript was available in the further hearing. The right of a city council to remove for cause upon evidence taken and reported by a committee, if certain requirements have been complied with, is sustained by Chace v. Providence, 36 R. I. 331, 89 Atl. 1066, a Rhode Island case decided in 1914 on a full review of the authorities. The petitioner in that case objected that he was tried and found guilty by a committee; that the council simply accepted and acted on their report, without any evidence having been placed before it or taken by it, and that he had a right to have the witnesses for and against him produced and examined before the city council itself. The court considered that this claim of right was without foundation in reason or authority, that the taking of evidence by an authorized committee to be acted upon by the whole body was a reasonable and proper procedure, and that no special statute or ordinance was needed to give it validity. The court supported its position by quoting freely from Osgood v. Nelson, 41 L. J. Q. B. (Eng.) 329, a case relating to the powers of the court of common council of London, the final decision of which was by the House of Lords. But if we were to adopt the doctrine of these cases it would not avail the petitioners. If the testimony taken by the committee was to be used in the hearing before the council, it was necessary that the commissioners have the same notice of the proceeding and the same presentation of charges that were required for a hearing by the council in the first instance. There is nothing to show that any notice was given or charges served. There is nothing that would justify us in assuming that Mr. Kidder represented the commissioners before the committee. It is true that he spoke several times as if the commissioners were coming in later, and announced near the close of the hearing that they were not coming in. There is nothing in this that carries any implication of an authority to represent."

In accord with the holding of the reported case it has been held that a body having the power to remove a municipal employee may delegate to one of its number the taking of evidence. People v. Board of Police, 93 N. Y. 97; People v. Board of Police, 98 N. Y. 332; People v. McClave, 123 N. Y. 512, 25 N. E. 1047. A contrary view was taken in Jacksonville v. Allen, 25 Ill. App. 54; but in People v. Chicago, 234 Ill. 416, 84 N. E. 1044, a statute authorizing the appointment by the civil service commission of a trial board to hear proceedings for removal was sustained, the court saying: "As we understand the ruling of the trial court on the proposition of law in question, it was held that the part of section 12 of said Civil Service act which authorizes the civil service commission to allow the investigation to be conducted before an officer or board appointed by it, rather than by the commission itself, was a delegation of judicial power and therefore unconstitutional. If the civil service commission, in hearing such charges, would not exercise judicial functions, it is difficult to see how it delegates judicial functions to the board or officer designated to investigate the charges, when such board or officer exercises no greater power in the investigation than would the commission itself. Indeed, this trial board did not exercise as great a power as the commission, as it only had authority to hear the charges and recommend action, subject to approval or disapproval by the commission. Said section 12 specifically provides that these investigations may be conducted by such boards or officers, and the reasoning of this court in People v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, and Chicago v. People, 210 Ill. 84, is conclusive as to the constitutionality of this provision."

UNION ICE AND COAL COMPANY

v.

TOWN OF RUSTON.

Louisiana Supreme Court—May 25, 1914.

135 La. 898; 66 So. 262.

Taxation — Limits on Taxing Power — Public Purchase.

In addition to the limitations on the Legislature of a state contained in the federal and state Constitutions, the Legislature is further subject in the passage of legislation to the limitations which inhere in the nature of our form of government, such as that the power of taxation can be validly exercised only for a public purpose, etc.

[See 16 Am. St. Rep. 365.]

Municipal Corporation — Power to Operate Ice Plant.

Const. art. 224, provides that the taxing power may be exercised by the General Assembly for state purposes and by parishes and municipal corporations and public boards, under authority delegated by the General Assembly for parish, municipal and local purposes "strictly" public in their nature. Held, that the word "strict" was used in the sense of exact; accurate; precise; undeviating; governed or governing by exact rules; and "strictly" as in a strict manner; closely, precisely, rigorously; stringently; positively; and that the construction and maintenance of a municipal ice plant by a small city operating a municipal waterworks and electric lighting system was not "strictly" a public activity, and could not be maintained by the exercise of the taxing power.

[See note at end of this case.]

Taxation — Purpose of Tax — What Constitutes Public Service.

The term "public service," within the rule that taxes can be laid only for public purposes, is not fulfilled by an activity whereby the private interests of many individuals are fulfilled; the test in general being whether the objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal.

Constitutional Law — Nature of Police Power.

The term "police power" has a meaning coextensive with sovereign power or sovereignty. As understood in American constitutional law, the term denotes the power of the state to impose those restraints on private rights which are necessary for the general welfare of all, and is but the power to enforce the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas." It is the power to regulate the business of others, and not a power to go into business.

[See 6 R. C. L. tit. Constitutional Law, p. 183.]

Appeal from Fourth District Court, Parish of Lincoln: HOLSTEAD, Judge.

Action to annul ordinance and for injunction. Union Ice and Coal Company, plaintiff, and Town of Ruston, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Barksdale & Barksdale for appellant.

S. D. Pearce and F. W. Price for appellee.

[899] PROVOSTY, J.—The town council of the town of Ruston having adopted an ordinance providing for the purchase and installation of an ice manufacturing plant, to be operated in connection with its water and electric light plant for the production of ice to be sold to the inhabitants of the town, the plaintiff company, and ice-manufacturing company, which had theretofore been furnishing ice to the town, brought this suit, in its quality of a taxpayer, to annul the ordinance, and enjoin its execution.

The ordinance is said by plaintiff to contravene articles 46, 58, 227, 263, 270, and 287 of the state Constitution; but, while these grounds are not waived in the argument, [900] they are evidently not insisted on with any great confidence in their merit. The main ground, to which the bulk of the brief of plaintiff is devoted, and to which we shall confine ourselves, is that the cost of said ice-manufacturing plant is proposed to be paid in part out of revenues derived from taxation; and that the power of taxation can be exercised only for public purposes; and that the manufacturing of ice by a town for sale to the inhabitants of the town is not a public purpose.

Act No. 3, p. 128, of 1912, amending act No. 136 of 1898, provides as follows:

"The mayor and board of aldermen of every city and town owning, maintaining and operating either municipal waterworks or electric light system or both shall have the additional power to install, own, maintain and operate in connection with such system, an ice-making plant for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with ice, and to prescribe the rates at which ice shall be supplied to its inhabitants."

There is no question, therefore, but that the town had authority to adopt said ordinance, if the conferring of such authority was within the power of the Legislature.

As we understand the argument of the learned counsel for the defendant, it is that the Legislature "may do everything which the state Constitution does not prohibit." This is not true. In addition to the limitations contained in the federal and state Constitutions, there are those limitations which inhere in the nature of our form of government; such as that the power of taxation can be validly exercised only for a public purpose. But, for finding this particular limitation, it is not necessary, in this state, to go outside of the Constitution, for its article 224 provides as follows:

"Art. 224. The taxing power may be exercised by the General Assembly for state purposes and by parishes and municipal corporations and public boards, under authority granted to them by the General Assembly, for parish, municipal, and local purposes, strictly public in their nature."

[901] The several Constitutions of this state prior to that of 1879 contained no restriction upon the taxation power except those of equality and uniformity. The Constitution of 1879 contained many restrictions. The Constitution of 1898 retained them, and added to them this one, that the power should be exercised by municipalities only for purposes "strictly public in their nature."

Our question is, therefore, whether the establishment and operation of an ice plant for making ice to be sold to the townspeople is a "purpose strictly public in its nature."

It may be well to premise that, in a case such as this, where a municipality is about to contract for an expenditure that will have to be met, in whole or in part, by taxation, the taxpayer who, like the plaintiff in this case, intends to resist the tax, does not have to wait until the tax has been actually imposed, or until his property is being seized to satisfy it, but that he may attack the ordinance itself which authorizes the expenditure to be incurred; indeed, that that is the proper course for him to pursue. As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 660, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 455-460:

"The validity of a contract which can only be fulfilled by a resort to taxation depends on the power to levy the tax for that purpose."

So well settled is this that the learned counsel for defendant have not made any point in that connection. See 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 1084.

As indicating the public nature of such an enterprise, the learned counsel for defendant adduce the fact (not supported, by the way, by any evidence in the case) that the United States government has established ice plants of this kind for supplying its own needs, not for sale; and that the city of New York is meditating a like undertaking. But, we imagine, no one would contest the right of the town of Ruston to do this same thing if [902] the town were of proper size for such a thing. But Ruston is not a city, nor even a very large town.

The engineer in charge of the town electric light plant testified that an ice plant could be operated very economically in connection with the electric light plant, because it would be run during the day, when the load is off of the electric light plant, and therefore with the same engine and, to some extent, by the same employees, and with no great addition of fuel. But the question in such cases is not whether the thing can be done economically or not, but whether the doing of it falls within the legitimate functions of municipal government. The fact that shoes and ready-made clothing could be manufactured more cheaply by the municipality in connection with its public utilities would not justify the town in going into the shoes and clothes business.

We do not wish to be understood, however, as placing shoes and clothes on a parity with ice in connection with the possibility of their production being, or becoming, a municipal function. While both are to-day on a parity as articles of commerce, there is this difference between them: That the bulkiness of ice renders its being produced locally of greater necessity than is the case with shoes or clothes. Water and light may be—indeed, are—articles of commerce in towns unprovided with the modern facilities for furnishing both to the inhabitants more conveniently and economically; but the furnishing of them to the inhabitants of a town is now a well-recognized municipal function. Whether, if it were shown that ice can be produced so cheaply in connection with a town electric light plant as to be classable almost as a by-product, and, as such, be furnished to the inhabitants of the town with incomparably greater convenience and cheapness than by the ordinary mode, a case would not be presented to which the same reasons would in a [903] measure be applicable which justify the furnishing of water and light as municipal functions, we will not undertake to say. Such proof has not been made. Defendant's engineer has merely shown that the production under those conditions would be cheaper; and he admits that he is no expert in the matter, and that much of such information as he possesses on the subject has been derived from interested sources—from sellers of ice-making machinery.

On the question of what is a public purpose many illuminating passages are to be found in the decisions, from among which we select a few:

In People v. Salem, Tp. 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400, Judge Cooley, speaking for the Supreme Court of Michigan, said:

"But when we examine the power of taxation with a view to ascertain the purposes for which burdens may be imposed upon the public, we perceive at once that necessity is not the governing consideration, and that in many cases it has little or nothing to do with the question presented. Certain objects must of necessity be provided for under this power, but in regard to innumerable other objects for which the state imposes taxes upon its citizens, the question is always one of mere policy, and if the taxes are imposed, it is not because it is absolutely necessary that those objects should be accomplished, but because, on the whole, it is deemed best by the public authorities that they should be. On the other hand, certain things of absolute necessity to civilized society the state is precluded, either by express constitutional provisions or by necessary implication, from providing for at all; and they are left wholly to the fostering care of private enterprise and private liberality. We concede, for instance, that religion is essential, and that without it we should degenerate to barbarism and brutality; yet we prohibit the state from burdening the citizen with its support, and we content ourselves with recognizing and protecting its observance on secular grounds. Certain professions and occupations in life are also essential, but we have no authority to employ the public moneys to induce persons to enter them. The necessity may be pressing, and to supply it may be, in a certain sense, to accomplish a 'public purpose;' but it is not a purpose for which the power of taxation may be employed. The public necessity for an educated and skillful physician in some particular locality may be great and pressing; yet, if the people should be taxed to hire one to locate there, the common voice would exclaim that the public moneys [904] were being devoted to a private purpose. The opening of a new street in a city or village may be of trifling public importance as compared with the location within it of some new business or manufacture; but, while the right to pay out the public funds for the one would be unquestionable, the other, by common consent, is classified as a private interest, which the public can aid as individuals if they see fit, while they are not permitted to employ the machinery of the government to that end. Indeed, the opening of a new street in the outskirts of a city is generally very much more a matter of private interest than of public concern; so much so that the owner of the land voluntarily throws it open to the public without compensation. Yet, even in a case where the public authorities did not regard the street as of sufficient importance to induce their taking the necessary action to secure it, it would not be doubted that the moment they should consent to accept it as a gift the street would at once become a public object and purpose, upon which the public funds might be expended with no more restraints upon the action of the authorities in that particular than if it were the most prominent and essential thoroughfare of the city.

"By common consent, also, a large portion of the most urgent needs of society are regulated exclusively to the law of demand and supply. It is this in its natural operation, and without the interference of the government, that gives us the proper proportion of tillers of the soil, artisans, manufacturers, merchants, and professional men, and that determines when and where they shall give to society the benefit of their particular services. However great the need in the direction of any particular calling, the interference of the government is not tolerated, because, though it might be supplying a public want, it is considered as invading the domain that belongs exclusively to private inclination and enterprise. We perceive, therefore, that the term 'public purposes,' as employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, has no relation to the urgency of the public need, or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow. It is, on the other hand, merely a term of classification, to distinguish the object for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private inclination, interest, or liberality."

In Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 664, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 455-461, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Justice Miller, said:

"It is undoubtedly the duty of the Legislature which imposes or authorizes municipalities to impose a tax to see that it is not to be used for purposes of private interest instead of a public use, and the courts can only be justified [905] in interposing when a violation of this principal is clear and the reason for interference cogent. And, in deciding whether, in the given case, the object for which the taxes are assessed falls upon the one side or the other of this line, they must be governed mainly by the course and usage of the government, the objects for which taxes have been customarily and by long course of legislation, levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal. Whatever lawfully pertains to this and is sanctioned by time and the acquiescence of the people may well be held to belong to the public use, and proper for the maintenance of good government, though this may not be the only criterion of rightful taxation."

The rigors of the New England winter making it highly desirable that the municipalities should be allowed to become dispensaries of fuel, coal and wood, to their inhabitants at a reduced rate, the Legislature of Massachusetts, in 1892, concluded to give this authority to the towns of that state, if it could do so constitutionally; but having its doubts on the subject, submitted the question to the judges of the Supreme Court. The answer of the judges, reported 155 Mass. 601, 30 N. E. 1143, 15 L.R.A. 810, is a full discussion of the question of what is a public purpose and is as follows:

"Whether the Legislature can authorize a city or town to buy fuel, coal and wood, and to sell them to its inhabitants for fuel, must be determined by considering whether the carrying on of such a business for the benefit of the inhabitants can be regarded as a public service. This inquiry underlies all the questions on which our opinion is required. If such a business is to be carried on, it must be with money raised by taxation. It is settled that the Legislature can authorize a city or town to tax its inhabitants only for public purposes. This is not only the law of this commonwealth, but of the states generally, and of the United States. The following are some of the decisions or opinions on the subject: Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255, 26 N. E. 998; 11 L.R.A. 123; Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L.R.A. 487; Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341, 1 N. E. 413; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; State v. Osawkee Tp. 14 Kan. 418, 19 Am. Rep. 99; Mather v. Ottawa, 114 Ill. 659, 3 N. E. 216; Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 455; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110, 2 S. Ct. 361, 27 U. S. (L. ed.) 669; Atty.-Gen. v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. [906] 400; State v. Eau Claire, 40 Wis. 533; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Opinion of Justices, 58 Me. 590, appendix.

"It is not easy to determine in every case whether a benefit conferred upon many individuals in a community can be called a 'public service,' within the meaning of the rule that taxes can be laid only for public purposes. In general, however, it may be said that the promotion by taxation of the private interest of many individuals is not a public service, within the meaning of the Constitution. The preamble of the Constitution declares that: 'The end of the institution, maintenance, and administration of government is to secure the existence of the body politic; to protect it, and furnish the individuals who compose it with the power of enjoying in safety and tranquillity their natural rights and the blessings of life.' It is declared in part 1, art 1: 'That all men are born free and equal and have certain natural, essential and inalienable rights; among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; in fine, that of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness.' Constitutional questions concerning the power of taxation necessarily are largely historical questions. The Constitution must be interpreted as any other instrument with reference to the circumstances under which it was framed and adopted. It is not necessary to show that the men who framed it or who adopted it had in mind everything which by construction may be found in it, but some regard must be had to the modes of thought and action on political subjects then prevailing, to the discussions upon the nature of the government to be established, to the meaning of the language used as then understood, and to the grounds on which the adoption or rejection of the Constitution was advocated before the people. We know of nothing in the history of the adoption of the Constitution that gives any countenance to the theory that the buying and selling of such articles as coal and wood for the use of the inhabitants was regarded at that time as one of the ordinary functions of the government which was to be established. There are nowhere in the Constitution any provisions which tend to show that the government was established for the purpose of carrying on the buying and selling of such merchandise as, at the time the Constitution was adopted, was usually bought and sold by individuals, and with which individuals were able to supply the community, no matter how essential the business might be to the welfare of the inhabitants. The objects of the Constitution was to protect individuals in their rights to carry on the customary business of life, rather than to authorize the commonwealth or the 'towns, parishes, precincts, and other bodies politic' to undertake what had usually been left to the private enterprise of individuals. In the opinion in Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 664, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 455, 461, the Supreme Court [907] of the United States say: 'It is undoubtedly the duty of the Legislature which imposes or authorizes municipalities to impose a tax to see that it is not to be used for purposes of private interest instead of a public use, and the courts can only be justified in interposing when a violation of this principle is clear and the reason for interference cogent.' And in deciding whether, in the given case, the object for which the taxes are assessed falls upon the one side or the other of this line, they must be governed mainly by the course and usage of the government, the objects for which taxes have been customarily, and by long course of legislation, levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal.'

"The early usages of towns undoubtedly did not exhaust the authority which the Legislature can confer upon municipalities to levy taxes. Cities and towns, since the adoption of the Constitution, have been authorized to levy taxes for many other purposes than those for which taxes were then levied. Up to the present time, however, none of the purposes for which cities and towns have been authorized to raise money has included anything in the nature of what is commonly called trade or commercial business. Instances can be found of some very curious legislation by towns in the colonial and provincial times, some of which would certainly now be thought to be beyond the powers of towns under the Constitution. Whatever the theory was, towns in fact under the colony charter, and for some time under the province charter, often acted as if their powers were limited only by the opinion of the inhabitants as to what was best to be done. This was the result of their peculiar situation and condition, and the powers of towns or of the general court were not much considered. The exercise of these extraordinary powers, however, gradually died out. The purposes for which, by the province laws, towns were authorized to raise money were for the maintenance of highways, the support of the ministry, schools, and the poor, and for the defraying of other necessary charges arising within the town. The words 'necessary charges' are still retained in the statutes, but they have been strictly construed by the courts. We do not find either in the colony or the province laws any legislation relating to the buying and selling of coal or wood by towns for the use of the inhabitants, or any legislation on any similar subject. It is possible that there may be found in the records of some town a vote or votes showing that the town, in an emergency, was authorized to buy wood or coal for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with fuel, but we have not found any. Certainly it was not usual for towns to supply their inhabitants with fuel, unless they were paupers. Neither was it usual for towns to supply their inhabitants with grain or other commodities. We know of no instance of this being done, except by the town of Boston. In the fall of 1713 [908] there was a scarcity of grain, and the general court prohibited the exportation of it. 1 Pro. Laws, State Ed. p. 226. The Town of Boston, in March, 1713-14, voted to lay in a stock of grain to the amount of 5,000 bushels of corn, and to store it in some convenient place, and it was left to the selectmen to dispose of it as they saw fit. Eighth Report of Record Commissioners, pp. 101, 104. After that, as shown by the records, the town regularly bought and stored grain and sold it to the inhabitants, as late as 1775, and perhaps later, and it established two granaries, one of which, in the common, remained in use probably as long as the town bought and sold grain. Whether, after the Revolution, the town continued to buy grain we are not informed, as the records have not been printed. The amount which could be sold to any one person was often limited to a few bushels at a time. The report of a committee in 1774 shows that from March, 1769, to March, 1774, the quantity of corn and rye purchased was 5,836 bushels, and that the stock on hand was 376 bushels. It is apparent that the original purpose was to provide against a famine, and that it was not the intention of the town to assume the business of buying and selling all the grain which the inhabitants needed, but of keeping such an amount in store as was necessary in order that small quantities might be obtained, particularly by the poorer inhabitants, at what the selectmen, or a committee of the town, or the town itself, deemed reasonable prices. On May 25, 1795, the town voted to sell the granary. This action of the town of Boston was an exception to the usages of towns, and it appears from the reports of committees that before the Revolution it had come to be considered as of doubtful expediency, and during the Revolution, or not long after, it was discontinued. The nearest analogy under the Constitution to the subject we are considering is the authority given by the recent statute (Stat. 1891, c. 370), whereby cities and towns are empowered to maintain works for the manufacture and distribution of gas or electricity for furnishing lights to the municipalities and their inhabitants.

"In the opinion given to the House of Representatives on May 27, 1890, which is printed in Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L.R.A. 487, the Justices advised that the manufacture and distribution of gas or electricity for furnishing light to the inhabitants of cities and towns might properly be regarded as constituting a public service. It was there said that: 'It must often be a question of kind and degree whether the promotion of the interests of many individuals in the same community constitutes a public service or not.' Gas or electricity for furnishing light has in recent times become a most convenient means of lighting both public and private buildings, streets, and grounds. It is impracticable that each individual should manufacture gas or electricity for himself; but this can best be done by some company or the [909] municipality for a considerable territory, and for the use of both the municipality itself and the inhabitants. Everybody who chooses within that territory, cannot be permitted to manufacture and distribute gas or electricity for the public use or the use of other persons, as it is distributed by means of pipes or wires; and the number who properly can be permitted to lay pipes or wires in a given territory must be limited to one, or, at most, to a few, persons or corporations. The pipes or wires must be laid in or over the public ways, or in or over land taken for the purpose, which may require the exercise of the right of eminent domain. These were some of the reasons why the subject seemed to the Justices a proper one for municipal regulation and control and to constitute a service which a municipality could be authorized to perform for itself and its inhabitants. But when the Constitution was adopted the buying and selling of wood and coal for fuel was a well-known form of private business, which was generally carried on as other kinds of business were carried on, and is now carried on in much the same manner as it was then. It was and is a kind of business which, in its relations to the community, did not and does not differ essentially from the business of selling any other of the necessities of life. Although all kinds of business may be regulated by the Legislature, yet to buy and sell coal and wood for fuel requires no authority from the Legislature, and requires the exercise of no powers derived from the Legislature, and every person who chooses can engage in it in the same manner as in the buying and selling of other merchandise. We are not aware of any necessity why cities and towns should undertake this form of business any more than many others which have always been conducted by private enterprise, and we are not called upon to consider what extraordinary powers the commonwealth may exercise, or may authorize cities and towns to exercise, in extraordinary exigencies, for the safety of the state or the welfare of the inhabitants. If there be any advantage to the inhabitants in buying and selling coal and wood for fuel at the risk of the community on a large scale, and on what has been called the co-operative plan, we are of the opinion that the Constitution does not contemplate this as one of the ends for which the government was established, or as a public service for which cities and towns may be authorized to tax their inhabitants. We therefore answer the questions in the negative."

The apparent urgency of the situation again pressing the Legislature to take some action in the matter, it resubmitted the question to the judges in 1903. The answer reported was as follows:

"It is established that under our Constitution private property cannot be taken from its owner except for a public use. This is equally true [910] whether the property is a dwelling house, taken by right of eminent domain, or money demanded by the tax collector. The establishment of a business like the buying and selling of fuel requires the expenditure of money. If this is done by an agency of the government, there is no way to obtain the money except by taxation. Money cannot be raised by taxation except for a public use. Until within a few years, it generally has been conceded, not only that it would not be a public use of money for the government to expend it in the establishment of stores and shops for the purpose of carrying on a business of manufacturing or selling goods in competition with individuals, but also that it would be a perversion of the function of government for the state to enter as a competitor into the field of industrial enterprise, with a view either to the profit that could be made through the income to be derived from the business or to the indirect gain that might result to purchasers if prices were reduced by governmental competition. There may be some now who believe it would be well if business was conducted by the people collectively, living as a community, and represented by the government in the management of ordinary industrial affairs. But nobody contends that such a system is possible under our Constitution. It is plain, however, that taxation of the people to establish a city or town in the proprietorship of an ordinary mercantile or manufacturing business would be a long step towards it. If men of property, owning coal and wood yards, should be compelled to pay taxes for the establishment of a rival coal yard by a city or town, to furnish fuel at cost, they would thus be forced to make contributions of money for their own impoverishment; for, if the coal yard of the city or town was conducted economically, they would be driven out of business. A similar result would follow if the business of furnishing provisions and clothing, and other necessities of life, were taken up by the government; and men who now earn a livelihood as proprietors would be forced to work as employees in stores and shops conducted by the public authorities. Except for the severely onerous conditions from which we are now suffering, the causes of which arose outside of this state, beyond the reach of our legislative enactments, there is nothing materially different between the proposed establishment of a governmental agency for the sale of fuel and the establishment of a like agency for the sale of other articles of daily use. The business of selling fuel can be conducted easily by individuals in competition. It does not require the exercise of any governmental function, as does the distribution of water, gas, and electricity, which involves the use of the public streets and the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It is not important that it should be conducted as a single large enterprise, with supplies emanating from a single source, as is required for the economical management of the kinds of business last mentioned. It does not even call for the investment of a large capital, [911] but it can be conducted profitably by a single individual of ordinary means. We therefore have no hesitation in answering the first three questions in the negative." Opinion of Justices, 182 Mass. 605, 66 N. E. 26, 60 L.R.A. 592.

The syllabus of the case reads as follows: "Municipalities have authority to provide fuel for paupers; but they cannot be given power by the Legislature to buy and sell fuel in competition with private enterprise, although it is scarce and high in price, and the cost to consumers may be thereby reduced, unless there is such a scarcity as to create a general and widespread distress in the community, which cannot be met by private enterprise."

Very instructive in connection with our question, although not bearing directly upon it, are the two decisions of the Supreme Court of South Carolina in the celebrated Liquor Dispensary Cases.

In the case of McCullough v. Brown, 41 S. C. 220, 19 S. E. 458, 23 L.R.A. 410, the Supreme Court of South Carolina said:

"Finally the constitutionality of the dispensary act is assailed upon the ground that the Legislature have undertaken thereby to embark the state in a trading enterprise, which they have no constitutional authority to do; not because there is any express prohibition to that effect in the Constitution, but because it is utterly at variance with the very idea of civil government, the establishment of which was the expressly declared purpose for which the people adopted their Constitution; and therefore all the powers conferred by that instrument upon the various departments of the government must necessarily be regarded as limited by that declared purpose. Hence, when, by the first section of the second article of the Constitution, the legislative power was conferred upon the General Assembly, the language there cannot be construed as conferring upon the General Assembly the unlimited power of legislating upon any subject, or for any purpose, according to its unrestricted will, but must be construed as limited to such legislation as may be necessary or appropriate to the real and only purpose for which the Constitution was adopted—to wit, the formation of a civil government. In this connection it is noticeable that the word 'all' is not used in the section above referred to, but the language used is, 'the legislative power,' meaning such legislative power as may be necessary or appropriate to the declared purpose of the people in framing their Constitution and conferring their powers upon the various departments constituted for the sole purpose of carrying into effect their declared purpose. It is manifest from the numerous express restrictions [912] upon the legislative will found in the Constitution that the people were not willing to intrust even their own representatives with unlimited legislative power, but, as if not satisfied with these numerous express restrictions, and perhaps fearing that some important right might have been overlooked, a general clause, not usually found in state Constitutions, was inserted, apparently designed to cover any such omissions; for in section 41 of article 1 it is expressly declared that: 'The enumeration of rights in this Constitution shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people, and all powers not herein delegated remain with the people.' Now, upon well-settled principles of constitutional construction, we are not at liberty to disregard this clause, but must give it some meaning and effect. It seems to us that the true construction of this clause is that, while there are many rights . . . reserved to the people, not expressly, but by necessary implication, which are beyond the reach of the legislative power, unless such power has been expressly delegated to the legislative department of the government. These views have not only the support of the highest authority in this country, as may be seen by reference to the cases of Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 455, and Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 1 S. Ct. 442, 27 U. S. (L. ed.) 238, but have been distinctly adopted by the Supreme Court of the state in Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6, as well as by the courts of Massachusetts and Maine, as may be seen by reference to Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185, and Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; and, what is more, they were applied to the vital power of taxation—a power absolutely essential to the very existence of every government. These cases substantially hold that, although there may be no express restrictions contained in a state Constitution forbidding the imposition of taxes for any other purpose than a public purpose, yet such a restriction must necessarily be implied from the very nature of civil government; and hence the legislative department, under the general power of taxation conferred upon it, cannot impose any tax except for some public purpose. Upon the same principle it seems to us clear that any act of the Legislature which is designed to or has the effect of embarking the state in any trade which involves the purchase and sale of any article of commerce for profit, is outside and altogether beyond the legislative power conferred upon the General Assembly by the Constitution, even though there may be no express provision in the Constitution forbidding such an exercise of legislative power. Trade is not, and cannot properly be, regarded as one of the functions of government. On the contrary, its function is to protect the citizen in the exercise of any lawful employment, the right to which is guaranteed to the citizen by the terms of the Constitution, and certainly has never been delegated to any department of the government."

Ann. Cas. 1916C.—81.

[913] In the case of State v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 222, 20 S. E. 221, 26 L.R.A. 345, the same court reversed this decision on the ground that no rule of property was involved; that no one could acquire vested rights in the sale of intoxicating liquors; that intoxicating liquors could not be placed on the same footing with other commodities; and that the state, having the authority to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, had authority to dispense them itself as a means of regulation. But in this decision the court reaffirmed and emphasized the rule that the state was without authority to engage in trade or commerce. On this general principle the court said:

"We thing differences of opinion as to the constitutionality of this act arise from the attempt on the part of some to apply to it the law applicable to the ordinary commodities of life.

"It is because liquor is not regarded as one of the ordinary commodities that the act of 1892 prohibiting its sale was, as to that matter, construed to be constitutional. We cannot for a moment believe that the court would have declared an act constitutional that prohibited entirely the sale of corn, cotton, or other ordinary commodities. It is fallacious to argue, in the light of this distinction, so thoroughly sustained by the authorities, that, if the government can take the exclusive control of the liquor traffic, it can do so as to any other avocations in life."

The court said further:

"It is contended that the foregoing section prevents the Legislature from embarking the state in a commercial enterprise. We have no doubt that if such was the object of the act, and it was not intended as a police measure, it would be unconstitutional, even in the absence of section 41, art. 1. As we have said, if the act is not a police measure, it is unconstitutional. It is quite a different thing, however, when trade is simply an incident to a police regulation."

In Rippe v. Becker, 56 Minn. 100, 57 N. W. 331, 22 L.R.A. 857, the Minnesota Supreme Court denied the authority of the state Legislature to authorize a municipality to maintain an elevator or warehouse for the public storage of grain.

In Keen v. Waycross, 101 Ga. 588, 20 S. E. 42, the Supreme Court of Georgia held that a town had no authority to engage in [914] the business of selling plumbers' materials even in connection with the management of its waterworks plant.

And in Re Opinion of Justices, 58 Me. 590, the Supreme Court of Maine held that the Legislature could not empower a town to establish manufacturies on its own account and run them by the ordinary town officers or otherwise.

It will be noted that Judge Cooley, in People v. Salem Tp. supra, and Judge Miller, in Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, supra, would determine the question of whether a particular purpose is public or not mainly according to what has been the settled usage; Judge Miller very properly adding, however, that usage is not the sole criterion.

In the latter connection, the following extract from the decision of the Court of Appeals of New York, in the case of Sun Printing, etc. Ass'n v. New York, 8 App. Div. 230, 40 N. Y. S. 607, is apposite.

"In considering this question it must be premised that cities are not limited to providing for the strict necessities of their citizens. Under legislative authority, they may minister to their comfort, health, pleasure, or education. They are not limited to policing the city, to paving the streets, to providing it with light, water, sewers, docks, and markets. They may also be required by the sovereign power to furnish their citizens with schools, hospitals, dispensaries, parks, libraries, and museums, with zoological, botanical, and other gardens. They may thus gratify our ears with music of a summer afternoon, or minister to our comfort by providing us with public baths. Expenditures in all these directions under legislative authority have never been questioned. Where, then, shall we draw the line? It would be very simple to draw at those purposes for which precedent in the past can be found, and exclude all others. This test should be easy of application, but would be essentially vicious and erroneous. Growth and extension are as necessary in the domain of municipal action as in the domain of law. New conditions constantly arise which confront the Legislature with new problems. As the structure of society grows more complex, needs spring up which never existed before. These needs may be so general in their nature as to affect the whole country or the whole state, or they may be local and confined to a single county or municipality. [915] In any case, it is the duty of that legislative body which has the power and jurisdiction to apply the remedy. To hold that the Legislature of this state, acting as the parens patriae, may employ for the relief or welfare of the inhabitants of the cities of the state only those methods and agencies which have proved adequate in the past would be a narrow and dangerous interpretation to put upon the fundamental law. No such interpretation has thus far been placed upon the organic law by the courts of this state. Whenever the question has been considered, it has been universally treated in the broadest spirit."

What is meant here by treating the question in the broadest spirit is that the decision of the Legislature upon any particular point within its legitimate sphere of action is not to be overridden by the courts unless upon the clearest grounds of its being in violation either of the Constitution itself or of those fundamental principles which, apart from all written constitutional sanction, underlie our system of government. Touching this conclusiveness of the legislative decision, Judge Cooley, in his work on Taxation (2d ed.) p. 103, says:

"It is implied in all definitions of taxation that taxes can be levied for public purposes only. Differences of opinion frequently arise concerning the power to impose taxation in particular cases, but all writers who treat the subject theoretically and all jurists agree in the fundamental requirement that the purpose shall be public, and they differ, when they differ at all, upon the question whether the particular purpose proposed is within the requirement. It is also agreed that the determination what is and what is not a public purpose belongs in the first instance to the legislative department. It belongs there because the taxing power is a branch of the legislative, and the Legislature cannot lie under the necessity of requiring the opinion or the consent of another department of the government before it will be at liberty to exercise one of its acknowledged powers. The independence of the Legislature is an axiom in government; and to be independent it must act in its own good time, on its own judgment, influenced by its own reasons, restrained only as the people may have seen fit to restrain the grant of legislative power in making it. The Legislature must, consequently, determine for itself, in every instance, whether a particular purpose is or is not one which so far concerns the public as to render taxation admissible."

[1916] He adds:

"But it is also generally admitted that the legislative determination is not absolutely conclusive."

He then mentions the necessity of the purpose of a tax being public, and that the taxpayer may resist a tax whose purpose is not public, and adds:

"It is not inconsistent with this doctrine that in every instance the highest consideration should be paid to the determination of the Legislature that a tax should be laid. It is not lightly to be assumed that its members have come to the examination of the subject with any other than public motives, or that they have failed to give it due consideration or reflection. The presumption on the other hand must always be that they have considered it with honesty and fair purpose, and that their action is the result of their deliberate judgment. And with all these presumptions tending to support the legislative action, it would seem but reasonable and proper that the courts should support it when not clearly satisfied that an error has been committed. This is the general rule in constitutional law when the validity of legislation is involved, and it is applicable with peculiar force to the case of a legislative decision upon the purpose for which a tax may be laid."

The Legislature, by passing the said statute has determined that the establishing and carrying on of an ice plant by a town for supplying the citizens with ice is a purpose "strictly public in its nature;" and our question is whether that conclusion is clearly incorrect.

The only court that has had occasion to consider the question of whether the engaging in the ice business is a function of a public nature is the Supreme Court of Georgia. In Holton v. Camilla, 134 Ga. 560, 68 S. E. 472, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 116, 20 Ann. Cas. 199, that court said:

"If, in the hot season of the year, the inhabitant of the city must, for sanitary reasons, relinquish the cool draft from the well because, as has been demonstrated, wells of pure water cannot be maintained in populous communities, surely the city would have the right, were it practical, to cool the water which it delivers through pipes as a substitute, and which oftentimes is scarcely drinkable in its heated condition. [917] If not practicable to cool it in the pipes, and if it be necessary to the welfare, comfort, and convenience of the inhabitants that its temperature be lowered before being used for drinking purposes, why cannot the city provide for the delivery of a part of it in a frozen condition to be used in cooling such part of the balance as is used for drinking purposes? Is the difference between water in a liquid and in a frozen condition a radical one? Upon what principle could the doctrine rest that liquid water may be delivered by the city to its inhabitants by flowage through pipes, but that water in frozen blocks cannot be delivered by wagons or otherwise? If the city has a right to furnish its inhabitants with water in a liquid form, we fail to see why it cannot furnish it to them in a frozen condition. . . . It is a well-known fact that one of the main uses to which ice is put is the cooling of water for drinking purposes; and when it is used for this purpose, if impure, it is as apt to be deleterious to the consumer, as any other impure water. Why, then, in the exercise of its police power, may not a city guard against impurities in the ice, as well as the water used by its inhabitants? Nor do we see any rational objection on the idea that the city will be engaging in a manufacturing enterprise. The city might perhaps equally as well be said to be manufacturing when, by the use of a filtering process, it changes impure water into that which is pure. When, in connection with its waterworks system, it produces ice, it merely, by certain processes, changes the form and temperature of a part of the water supplied by that system. We do not think the operation by the city of Camilla of an ice plant in connection with its waterworks system, for the purpose of furnishing ice to its inhabitants, is in violation of the sections of the Constitution referred to in the plaintiff's petition, or that it is illegal for any reason."

The same line of reasoning here adopted by the Supreme Court of Georgia having been presented incidentally by counsel in the case of State v. Thompson, 149 Wis. 488, 137 N. W. 20, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 339, Ann. Cas. 1913C 774, in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, Judge Timlin, in a concurring opinion, made the following answer to it:

"It was said by counsel in argument that the furnishing of water by a city to its inhabitants is a municipal affair; that ice is but frozen water; hence the furnishing of ice must be a municipal affair. But things which are similar from a physical or chemical viewpoint may be dissimilar from the legal viewpoint. Under a statute authorizing a city to buy coal, it probably could not buy diamonds, although it is said they are chemically identical. Neither is atmospheric [918] gas passed through a varying aperture and articulated by varying contacts always equivalent to argument. The difference between the collection and distribution of water by means of pipes laid in the streets and the manufacture, sale and distribution of ice is that the first is in the nature of a monopoly, while the second is a competitive business enterprise. The first does not depend so largely upon skill in management."

Putting aside the frozen water argument of the Georgia court as having been well answered by the amusing witticism of the Wisconsin court, we note that, as pointed out by the Wisconsin court, all analogy between the municipal distribution of water and the municipal distribution of ice is destroyed by the fact that for the one business pipes have to be laid in the public streets, and, necessarily, for doing this, the streets have to be torn up and disturbed, whereas the other is a purely competitive business enterprise. There would be analogy between the two if the city were to abandon the sovereign mode of water distribution by means of underground conduits through the public streets, and to go peddling the liquid, as is done in towns unprovided with waterworks and unblest by a sufficient rainfall for gathering a supply in cisterns, and has to be done with ice. There would then be complete analogy; but everybody would then see that the town was no longer discharging a sovereign function, but carrying on a private enterprise.

The invocation of the police power by the Georgia court amounts practically to an acknowledgment of the weakness of its side of the argument. For nothing is better established than that, when a legislative measure is dependent for its execution upon the exercise of the taxing power, its validity must be determined by the validity of the tax that will have to be imposed for carrying it out.

"As the funds of a municipal corporation are raised by taxation, the power of the Legislature to authorize such a corporation to incur indebtedness, or to expend its funds for the purpose of [919] aiding individuals or individual enterprises, depends upon the fundamental question whether the corporation could be authorized to levy a tax for the purpose of liquidating the indebtedness to be incurred or could have levied a tax for the purpose of the expenditure proposed." 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 1084.

See, also, Citizens' Sav. etc. Ass'n v. Topeka, supra.

A city may, of course, "guard against impurities in the ice as well as in the water [and, we may add, in the milk, and fish, and meat, and bread] used by its inhabitants;" but the fact that it can do this, casts no light upon the question of whether it may go into the ice or the milk, or the fish, or the meat, or the bread, business. The terms "police power" and "eminent domain" have a meaning coextensive with sovereign power or sovereignty; but, as said by the Supreme Court of Minnesota, in a case where the police power was invoked for saving from nullity a plan to provide for the erection of a state grain elevator and storage warehouse (Rippe v. Becker, 56 Minn. 100, 57 N. W. 331, 22 L.R.A. 857, supra):

"As understood in American constitutional law, the term means simply the power of the state to impose those restraints upon private rights which are necessary for the general welfare of all, and is but the power to enforce the maxim, 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas.'"

In other words, it is a power to regulate the business of others, and not a power to go into business. Of course, if the business cannot be regulated otherwise than by the government going into it, or perhaps, even if, in the opinion of the Legislature, that mode of regulation is the most practical and best, such mode can be adopted; but nothing of that kind could be pretended in the case of the grain or the ice business. The police power, as a separate and distinct power from that of taxation, or in its meaning of one of the dismemberments of the sovereign power, is easily sufficient for regulating the ice business, without aid from the taxing power; and it can play no part in this case. [920] If, as stated in the argument, the ice business in this country is a monopoly that needs regulation, the power of taxation is not the proper power to use for that purpose. Such a thing might be done if the Constitution contained no restrictions on that power: but in this state the Constitution has practically put that power in a strait-jacket: and it goes without saying that the Legislature is powerless to liberate it therefrom.

One of these restrictions is that in municipal affairs that power can be exercised only where the purpose is "strictly public in its nature." The word "strictly" here inserted by the framers of the Constitution has to be reckoned with. In other words, in this state it does not suffice that a purpose be merely public in order that the power of taxation may be exercised for it, but it must be strictly so, and be so "in its nature."

Among the definitions given to the words "strict" and "strictly" in Webster's New International Dictionary are the following:

"Strict: Exact; accurate; precise; undeveloping; rigorously nice; hence, rigid in interpretation; free from latitude; as, to keep strict watch, or strict silence; strict construction of a law.

"Governed or governing by exact rules; rigorous; as very strict in observing the Sabbath; strict discipline.

"Strictly: In a strict manner; closely; precisely; rigorously; stringently; without latitude; positively."

The Century Dictionary gives the derivation of the word as from the Latin "strictus, past participle of stringere, draw tight, bind, contract," and, among other definitions, gives the following:

7. "Exacting; rigorous; severe; rigid.

8. "Restricted; taken strictly, narrowly, or exclusively."

"Strictly: Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence; with close adherence to rule."

In the interpretation of a statute or Constitution words are understood in their ordinary, popular meaning, and every word is to be given effect, if possible; none is to be [921] supposed to have been inserted by accident or inadvertence or without the deliberate intention that it should be understood in its ordinary meaning and given effect accordingly. Hence, in the interpretation of this article 224, the word "strict," qualifying the word "public," is to be understood in its ordinary, popular meaning as given hereinabove from the dictionaries, and is to be given effect accordingly. This is so elementary as not needing support by citation of authority. Let it be noted also that this article 224 does not contain this same qualification, limitation, or restriction when describing the state purposes for which the taxing power may be exercised, but has added it only when describing the municipal purposes. Its language is that:

"The taxing power may be exercised by the Legislature for state purposes [no qualification or restriction] and by municipal corporations for municipal purposes strictly public in their nature."

This contrast between the delegation of the power for state purposes and for municipal purposes places in a strong light the deliberate intention of the framers of this article 224 that the municipalities should be required to adhere rigidly to purposes strictly, or, in other words, clearly, or admittedly, public in their nature.

And it goes without saying that this provision of the Constitution is as binding on the Legislature as it is on the municipalities; that the Legislature can no more abate or arrest any part of its authority and controlling influence than the municipality can; and also that its rigid enforcement is as binding on the courts as the due observance of it is binding on the Legislature and the municipalities. Hence, unless a purpose is strictly public in its nature, the Legislature is as powerless to authorize the use of the taxing power for it as the municipality would be to use said power for the same purpose without legislative authority; and, if the [922] attempt is made to do so the courts are bound to enforce the constitutional provision.

It may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that, in the intention of this article 224, the Legislature cannot, by its fiat, make that a public purpose which is not already so. The requirement is that the purpose be in its nature public; that is to say, that it be of that character independently of the legislative fiat. This restriction of article 224 would be no restriction at all if the Legislature could make public in its nature every purpose for which it desired to delegate the taxing power to a municipality.

By a purpose being strictly public in its nature this article 224 does not mean merely that the purpose must be unaffected by or uncoupled with a private interest; or, in other words, merely that no private individual or private corporation be associated in the business with the municipality. It means that the business must in itself be public; or, in other words, that it must be a municipal business, such business as pertains to the administration of the municipality as a municipality. This results from the force of the expression "in its nature;" not because the Legislature chooses that the municipality may or shall conduct the business; but because the business is in its nature public. If the idea had been merely to prohibit or preclude the use of the taxing power in the interest of private individuals, or corporations, either in partnership with the municipality or separately, this provision would have been left out as useless, since ample provision had already been made by article 58, in the most specific and searching terms, against any use of the taxing power in connection with private interests.

No one familiar with the discussions that had taken place both in and out of the courts prior to the adoption of this restriction in article 224 touching this question of [923] how far the taxing power may be used by municipalities for engaging in business usually left to private enterprise, such as public grist mills, storage warehouses, distribution of fuel, etc., can fail to see at a glance that this restriction was adopted for the very purpose of settling that question in this state; of giving constitutional sanction in this state to the principle which, independently of constitutional expression, underlies our form of government, and, as such, had been enforced in other states—that the taxing power can be used only for public purposes.

The framers of this article 224 were familiar with these discussions, and knew that, while there was no disagreement on the point that the taxing power can be legitimately used only for a public purpose, there was great difficulty in ascertaining what was and what was not a public purpose; and to one familiar with the said discussions it is obvious that the peculiar phraseology of this article 224 was adopted with a view to removing that difficulty in this state as far as possible. It was not possible to enumerate what purposes should be held to be public and what not. General language had to be used; and the provision was worded as we find it; that the purpose must be public in its nature, and that it must be so, not merely by taking a liberal or latitudinous view of the matter, or, as some decisions had held, by viewing it in "a liberal spirit" but "strictly" so; i. e.:

"Restrictedly; severely; narrowly or exclusively; rigorously; without latitude; positively; with close adherence to rule."

Now, is this business in which the defendant municipality proposes to engage by this ordinance of this strictly public character in its nature?

We think clearly not. The business of manufacturing and selling ice has heretofore been left to private enterprise; as much so [924] as the business of making and selling bread or of any of the articles of household consumption.

The only feature of it that is suggested as likely to impart to it a public character is the growing necessity of ice as an article of household consumption, in modern life; but ice is no more necessary than bread and meat. In fact, this argument of necessity has been so thoroughly pulverized, annihilated, by Judge Cooley in the Salem Case, supra, that the discussion of it here would be mere waste of time. And the argument of cheapness of production comes in the same category and must share the same fate; unless, indeed, as intimated hereinabove by us, under very special circumstances such as are not revealed by the record in this case.

Nothing, then, indicates the public nature of this business, and still less its strictly public nature, and the case resolves itself into the proposition that, in disregard of the said restriction of article 224, the Legislature has undertaken to authorize the municipalities of this state to use the taxing power for a purpose not strictly public in its nature. In such a case the courts are left to choose between the Constitution and the Legislature, and necessarily must obey the Constitution.

In the brief of the defendant, the statement is made that:

"So far as research has been able to disclose, there is only one municipal ice plant in active operation in the United States, and this is in Weatherford, Okla."

The "research" here spoken of is not that of the defendant or of its counsel, but of J. Walls Wentworth, appointed by the president of the borough of Manhattan to gather statistical information on the subject of municipal and government ice plants, "and to extend his research in foreign countries as well as in the United States." This research [925] shows that there are two towns in England—Bolton and Wolverhampton—and several in Italy that manufacture ice for sale, and none other in the world, except the Oklahoma town. Judging from this, any one would unhesitatingly say that the making of ice for sale was not supposed by the world in general to be a municipal function; but that, on the contrary, the consensus of opinion throughout the civilized world was that it was not.

We do not lose sight of the fact that, as well as observed by the Court of Appeals of New York, supra, changed conditions may bring about new purposes for which the taxing power may be legitimately exercised: but ice was being manufactured in cities for sale long before the adoption of the Constitution of 1898; and the need for municipal distribution of ice was at that time just as great and as well known to everybody as now; and hence no changes brought about by new conditions can be invoked in connection with that business.

Not a city or town of the state, except the defendant, has sought to take advantage of this law, so far as we know. And we should not wonder at this lack of interest, if the operation of this law is to be the same in all the towns and cities as is shown in this case it would be the defendant town. The soda water stands are shown to consume a large quantity of ice and to pay but an insignificant amount of taxes. The Rock Island Railroad pays over $3,000 of taxes, approximately one-fourth of the total tax of the town, and consumes but an insignificant amount of ice. The operation of this ice plant scheme would be to make the Rock Island Railroad and other large taxpayers who at the same time are small consumers

[926] of ice pay in part for the ice to be furnished by the town to the small taxpayers who are at the same time large consumers of ice. What would be the operation of this law in the city of New Orleans with its street rail-ways and banks and agencies of all kinds paying heavy taxes and needing no ice save a lump for the water cooler, is easily imagined. The pockets of these large taxpayers would be gone into by the city to enable her to drive out of business and destroy the existing ice companies. The operation of this law is thus referred to as calculated to throw a sidelight upon the question of whether this ice making and selling enterprise by a town or city is or is not a "purpose strictly public in its nature."

For the support of its paupers and indigent sick the municipality may go as deeply as the necessity of the case may require into the pockets of its large taxpayers; but it cannot do so for the purpose of selling ice, or bread, or meat, or drugs, etc., etc., more cheaply to its inhabitants in general than the regular merchants are doing. This would be paternalism pure and simple, a thing foreign to our form of government.

The judgment appealed from is therefore set aside, and it is now ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the ordinance of the town of Ruston No. 120, adopted on October 28, 1912, be, and the same is, hereby decreed to be unconstitutional, null, and void, and is hereby annulled, that an injunction issue enjoining the mayor and board of aldermen of said town from attempting to carry said ordinance into effect, and that defendant pay the costs of this suit.

O'Niell, J., takes no part.

Rehearing denied October 20, 1914.

NOTE.

Power of Municipality to Operate Plant for Purpose of Furnishing Ice to Inhabitants.

Since the decision in Tolton v. Camilla, 134 Ga. 580, 20 Ann. Cas. 199, which is said in the note thereto to be a case of first impression, no decision other than the reported case seems to have passed on the power of a municipality to operate a plant for the purpose of furnishing ice to its inhabitants. That case, taking a strict view of the nature of municipal functions, reaches a conclusion opposite to that arrived at in Holton v. Camilla, supra, and denies the existence of the power in question. The question was referred to in a concurring opinion in State v. Thompson, 149 Wis. 488, Ann. Cas. 1913C 774, the holding in that case being that a "Home Rule" statute under which it was sought to adopt a charter amendment allowing a municipal ice plant was invalid. The closely related question of the power of a municipality to furnish fuel to its inhabitants is discussed in the note to Laughlin v. Portland, Ann. Cas. 1916C 734.

GENERAL INDEX

To Cases and Notes in this Volume.

[For separate Index to Notes, see post, p. 1343.]

ABANDONMENT.

See Appeal and Error.

ABORTION.

Accomplices—victim of abortion as accomplice. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627. Annotated
Breach of promise of marriage—abortion as element of damages. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.

Expert evidence—effect of abortifacient—basis for testimony. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
Means—necessity that drug administered be capable of producing intended effect. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.

Sentence for abortion—sentence held not excessive. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
See also Appeal and Error.

ABSTRACT QUESTIONS.

See Actions and Proceedings.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

See Streets and Highways.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

Construction of policy—reduction of benefits. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447.

Fighting—recovery for injury received while fighting. Hutton v. States Accident Ins. Co. (Ill.), 577. Annotated Limitation of time to sue—validity. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447.

—waiver of limitation. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447. Annotated

ACCOMPLICES.

Abortion—victim of abortion as accomplice. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627. Annotated

Evidence—competency of testimony of accomplice. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.

—confession as sufficient corroboration of accomplice. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568. Annotated —testimony of accomplice—necessity of corroboration of. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.

Homicide—articles taken from accomplice—admissibility in evidence. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

Satisfaction of disputed claim—necessity for acceptance of sum in full settlement. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573.

ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS.

Joinder of causes of action—refusal to compel election as prejudicial error. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503.

—two causes of action for malicious prosecution—joinder of causes of action. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.

Merger or suspension—civil action predicated on commission of felony. Smith v. Selwyn (Eng.), 844. Annotated

Moot inquiry—case presented for determination of abstract question. Sherod v. Aitchison (Ore.), 1151.

Pendency—when action is deemed to be pending. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620.

Survival of actions—action by partnership—death of member—continuation in name of survivors. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620.

—action for conspiracy to restrain trade. Frohlich v. Deacon (Mich.), 722. Annotated

See also Alienation of Affections; Amendments; Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances; Limitation of Actions; Real Property; Witnesses.

ADJOINING LANDOWNERS.

Termination of right to maintenance of party wall—destruction of wall. Commercial National Bank v. Eccles (Utah), 368. Annotated

ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators.

ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS.

Admissions in open court—effect. McCoy v. McCoy (W. Va.), 367.

Conspiracy—admissibility of acts and declarations of co-conspirators. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.

Infants—declaration of infant at time of homicide as part of res gestæ. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182. Annotated

Pleading—cross-petition as admission. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.

Res gestæ—scope of doctrine of res gestæ generally. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182.

Self-serving declaration properly excluded. Barfield v. Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

Workmen's compensation acts—admissibility of declarations of injured workman as to cause of injury. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771. Annotated

ADOPTED STATUTES.

See Statutes.

ADOPTION.

Inheritance from adopted child—estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child. Russell v. Jordan (Colo.), 760. Annotated

—right of inheritance as between natural and adopted parent. Carpenter v. Buffalo General Electric Co. (N. Y.), 754. Annotated

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Instruction condemned. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.

ADVERTISING.

Billboards—validity of ordinance regulating. Thomas Cusack Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 488. Annotated

Right of tenant to use wall of building for advertising. Snyder v. Kulesh (Iowa), 481. Annotated

AFFIANCED PERSONS.

See Undue Influence.

AGENCY.

Contract of agent—contract for improvements—right to mechanic's lien—construction of statute. Stewart v. Talbott (Colo.), 1116.

—usurious contract—responsibility of principal. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321. Annotated

Del credere agent—nature and extent of liability to principal. Gabriel v. Churchill (Eng.), 1087. Annotated

AIDERS AND ABETTERS.

See Criminal Law.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.

Excessive damages in action for alienation of affections. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743. Annotated

Right of action by wife for alienation of affections of husband. Nieberg v. Cohen (Vt.), 476. Annotated

Right of action by wife for alienation of affections of husband. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743. Annotated

ALIENS.

Statute requiring license to hunt game—right of alien to license. Bondi v. Mackay (Vt.), 130. Annotated

ALLOWANCE.

See Executors and Administrators.

AMENDMENTS.

Pleading—amendment by adding new parties plaintiff. Nesiska v. Aten (S. Dak.), 589. Annotated

AMENDMENTS — Continued.

- Pleading—amendment by changing capacity in which plaintiff sues from representative to personal capacity. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398. Annotated — amendment by changing names of parties. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.
 — statute permitting amendment—construction. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

ANCESTORS.

See Insanity.

ANCIENT MAPS.

See Maps.

ANSWER.

See Pleading.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

- Assignments of error—joint assignment—ruling correct as to one. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 — necessity that assignment of error be definite. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
 Bills of exceptions—reference to purported instruction by number only—sufficiency of identification. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160.
 Bond—liability of sureties—effect of abandonment of appeal. Woodle v. Settlemeyer (Ore.), 1222. Annotated Disposition of cause—entry of final judgment on reversal. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.
 Examination of case—bankruptcy—review of allowance of claim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.
 — bankruptcy—review of confirmation of sale. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.
 — decision of intermediate court of appeal. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.
 — decision on former appeal—law of the case. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527.
 — denial of motion to strike out judgment. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 — denial of new trial. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 — error not shown by record. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
 — exception not reserved below—murder case. People v. Tomlins (N. Y.), 916.
 — exceptions to instructions not appearing in record. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160.
 — failure to ask peremptory instruction below—effect on right to contend that verdict is against weight of evidence. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 — failure to incorporate error in bill of exceptions—misconduct of counsel. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248.
 — failure to urge error on motion for new trial below—misconduct of counsel. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.
 — finding not contrary to preponderance of evidence. Cost v. Shinault (Ark.), 483.
 — finding of fact in proceeding under workmen's compensation acts. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.
 — finding on challenge to jurors. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 — objection not raised below—misconduct of counsel. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
 — objection not raised below—refusal of instruction. Miller v. Delaware River Trans. Co. (N. J.), 165.
 — objection not raised below—sufficiency of complaint for violation of ordinance. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
 — questions of fact. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743.
 — verdict on conflicting evidence. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248; Seidler v. Burns (Conn.), 266.
 Harmless error—admission of evidence. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627; Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771; Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081; Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
 — exclusion of evidence. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115; Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661; Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.
 — failure of trial court to submit contention of party. Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081.
 — giving erroneous instruction. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375; Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
 — overruling of demurrer. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 — proper answer to improper question. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
 — refusal of instruction. Taylor v. Northern Coal, etc. Co. (Wis.), 187.
 — remarks of counsel. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 — striking out parties. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620.
 — temporary absence of judge during trial. Tingue v. State (Ohio), 1156.
 — validity of count in statement filed in criminal court—question not raised. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.

APPEAL AND ERROR—Continued.

Jurisdiction of appellate court—entry of final judgment as denial of jury trial. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.
 — power to make new findings. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.
 New trial—newly discovered evidence—right of appellate court to entertain motion. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 728.
 Persons entitled to allege error—irresponsive answer by witness. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
 Presumptions on appeal—presumption that verdict rests on proven facts. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
 Record—correction of record by lower court. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 — entitling papers—effect of error. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 Right to appeal—waiver—payment of fine in criminal case. State v. People's Ice Co. (Minn.), 618. Annotated
 Time for appeal—computation. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
See also Judgments; Res Judicata.

ARCHITECTS.

See Building Contracts.

ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

See Misconduct of Counsel.

ARMY AND NAVY.

Pensions—effect of admission of pensioner to soldiers' home. Mason v. Board of Managers (Mich.), 848. Annotated Soldiers' home—nature of institution. Mason v. Board of Managers (Mich.), 848.

ARREST.

Notary public—power to issue warrant. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519.
 Railroad policeman—right to summon bystanders to assist in making arrest. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.

ARTICLES.

See Evidence.

ASSAULT.

Excessive damages—action for assault and battery. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248.
 Self-defense—person assaulted on his own premises—right to repel attack without retreat. People v. Tomlins (N. Y.), 916. Annotated — person injuring bystander while acting in self-defense—liability as for negligence. Shaw v. Lord (Okla.), 1147. Annotated
See also Rape.

ASSESSMENT.

See Stock and Stockholders.

ASSETS.

See Bankruptcy.

ASSIGNMENTS.

Note—assignment of note—right of assignee to sue—right to question consideration of assignment. Sims v. Everett (Ark.), 629.

ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Assumption of risk as affirmative defense. King v. Cooney-Eckstein Co. (Fla.), 163.

ATTACHMENT.

Equitable interest in real property as subject to attachment. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783. Annotated Waiver of chattel mortgage lien by attachment. Ex p. Logan (Ala.), 405. Annotated See also Res Judicata.

ATTORNEYS.

Negligence of attorney—action for damages—joinder of plaintiffs. Noziska v. Aten (S. Dak.), 589.

ATTORNEYS — Continued.

- Privileged communications—communication in presence of third person as privileged. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071.
- communication in regard to testamentary matters as privilege. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071. Annotated
- communication to attorney held not privileged. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
- Summary control by court—transaction outside professional relation. Krickau v. Williams (R. I.), 1145.
- See also Malicious Prosecution.

AUTOMOBILES.

- Liability of manufacturer of automobile to purchaser for defect therein. MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (N. Y.), 440.

AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS.

- Workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cue v. Port of London Authority (Eng.), 887.

BAGGAGE.

- Duty of carrier to provide safe places for delivery of baggage to passenger. Johnson v. Florida East Coast R. Co. (Fla.), 1210. Annotated

BAIL.

- Forfeiture of bail—allowance of interest on penalty. People v. Parisi (N. Y.), 111. Annotated
- enforcement of forfeiture—defenses. People v. Parisi (N. Y.), 111.
- necessity of notice to surety to produce principal. People v. Parisi (N. Y.), 111.

BANKRUPTCY.

- Concealment of assets—criminal liability of corporation. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466. Annotated
- indictment as charging felony. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
- sufficiency of evidence. Kaufman v. United States (U. S.), 466.
- what constitutes offense. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
- Set-off—estoppel of bankrupt to set up counterclaim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated
- laches of bankrupt as barring counterclaim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated
- right of set-off under American bankruptcy acts. Morris v. Windsor Trust Co. (N. Y.), 972.
- right to set off unliquidated claim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated
- set-off by bank of deposit against debt due bank—effect as voidable transfer under bankruptcy law. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated
- See also Appeal and Error.

BANKS.

- Bankruptcy—set-off by bank of deposit against debt due bank—effect as voidable transfer under bankruptcy law. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated
- Insolvency—statute providing for raising presumption of fraud against officers of insolvent bank—validity. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80.
- when bank is "insolvent." Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80. Annotated

BAWDY HOUSES.

See Disorderly Houses.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS.

- Beneficiaries—designation in by-laws. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.
- immoral relation between insured and beneficiary—sufficiency of evidence. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.
- selection by insured of beneficiary not having insurable interest—public policy. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584. Annotated
- statement in constitution as restrictive. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.

BENEFICIARIES.

See Insurance.

BENEFITS.

See Accident Insurance.

BIDS.

Deposit with bid—withdrawal of bid—rights of parties. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 425.
Annotated

BIGAMY.

Competency of wife as witness in prosecution for bigamy. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
Annotated

BILLBOARDS.

Billboard—validity of ordinance regulating. Thomas Cusack Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 488.
Annotated

BILLS AND NOTES.

Assignment of note—right of assignee to sue—right to question consideration of assignment. Sims v. Everett (Ark.), 629.
 Construction—note and mortgage security construed together. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 Gift causa mortis—promissory note—sufficiency of delivery. Barber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 Negotiability—uncertainty as to amount. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 ——— uncertainty as to date of maturity. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 Note given to corporation as security—notice of defenses—sufficiency of evidence. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 Note secured by mortgage—right to maintain separate actions on note and mortgage. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
See also Payment.

BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS.

See Appeal and Error.

BLASTING.

See Explosions and Explosives.

BONDS.

Reformation of bond—changing name of obligee. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.
Annotated
See also Appeal and Error; Bail.

BOOKS.

See Medical Books.

BOUNDARIES.

Establishment of boundary line by parol agreement. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.

BREACH OF COVENANT.

See Deeds.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

Damages—abortion as element of damages. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
 ——— seduction as element of damages. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
 Evidence—understanding of family as evidence of agreement to marry. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
Annotated

BROKERS.

Compensation—admissibility of evidence as to financial ability of purchaser. Sotham v. Macomber (Mich.), 694.

BUILDING CONTRACTS.

Architect's certificate—conclusiveness. American-Hawaiian Eng., etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 Payment—failure of owner to pay instalment—judgment for contractor—provision for paying subcontractor American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 ——— right to payment—architect's certificate refused. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 Rescission by contractor—failure to pay instalment. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 Termination for default of contractor—requisites of notice. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 ——— right of owner to complete work. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.

BUILDING CONTRACTS — Continued.

- Time for completion of work—effect of waiver of stipulation as to time. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 ——— sufficiency of evidence to show waiver of time of performance. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
 ——— validity of oral extension of time. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.

BUILDING RESTRICTIONS.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

BUILDINGS.

- Scaffold erected for painting building—injury to pedestrian—negligence of independent contractor—liability of owner. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115. Annotated
See also Landlord and Tenant; Municipal Corporations; Nuisances.

BULK SALES.

See Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

- Ordinances—burden of showing invalidity of ordinance. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956.
 Personal injuries—burden of proof as to cause of injury. Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.

BURGLARY.

- Instructions—necessity of instructing as to circumstantial evidence. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318.
 Opening partly open door as burglary. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318. Annotated

BURIAL INSURANCE.

- Contract to provide funeral as insurance contract. Renschler v. State (Ohio), 1014. Annotated

BUSINESS.

See Monopolies; Municipal Corporations.

BY-LAWS.

See Beneficial Associations.

BYSTANDERS.

See Arrest; Negligence.

CARRIERS OF GOODS.

- Personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of carrier of goods to person receiving freight. Miller v. Delaware River Trans. Co. (N. J.), 165. Annotated

CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

- Baggage—duty of carrier to provide safe place for delivery of baggage to passenger. Johnson v. Floradia East Coast R. Co. (Fla.), 1210. Annotated Contributory negligence of passenger—extending arm outside of car. Malakia v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.), 1216. Annotated Injunctions—enforcement of right to carriage by injunction. Hogan v. Nashville Interurban R. Co. (Tenn.), 1162.
 Insulting language—liability of carrier for insulting language by employee to passenger. Haile v. New Orleans R. etc. Co. (La.), 1233.
 Sick or disabled passengers—duty of carrier to carry disabled person. Hogan v. Nashville Interurban R. Co. (Tenn.), 1162.
 ——— duty of carrier to passenger taken sick in transit. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856. Annotated

CAUSA MORTIS.

See Gifts.

CENSORSHIP.

See Moving Pictures.

CERTIFICATES.

See Building Contracts.

CHAIN OF TITLE.

See Quietting Title.

CHALLENGES.

See Jury.

CHARACTER.

See Criminal Law.

CHARTS.

See Hospitals and Asylums.

CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

Remedies of mortgagee. Ex p. Logan (Ala.), 405.

Waiver of chattel mortgage lien by attachment. Ex p. Logan (Ala.), 405.

*AnnotatedCHILDREN.

See Infants.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

See Burglary.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Who is "colored" person. Tucker v. Blease (S. Car.), 796.

CLAIMS.

See Municipal Corporations.

CLEANING STREETS.

See Streets and Highways.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

See Eminent Domain.

COLLATERAL SECURITY.

See Stock and Stockholders.

COLORED PERSONS.Separation of white and colored pupils for purposes of education. Tucker v. Blease (S. Car.), 796. Annotated

Who is "colored" person. Tucker v. Blease (S. Car.), 796.

COMMERCE.

Commerce within federal constitution—what constitutes—correspondence school. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.

COMMITTEES.

See Public Officers.

COMPENSATION.

See Brokers; Corporations; Master and Servant; Streets and Highways; Tenants in Common.

COMPUTATION OF TIME.

See Appeal and Error.

CONCEALMENT.

See Bankruptcy.

CONCUSSION.

See Explosions and Explosives.

CONDUCT OF JUDGE.

See Trial.

CONFESSIONS.

- Confession as sufficient corroboration of accomplice. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568. Annotated
 Intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession. Lindsey v. State (Fla.), 1167. Annotated

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

- Damages—what law governs in assessment in damages for personal injuries. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.
 Statute of limitations—what law governs. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.
See also Taxation.

CONFRONTING WITNESSES.

See Witnesses.

CONSENT.

See Mechanics' Liens; Nuisances; Physicians and Surgeons.

CONSIDERATION.

See Contracts; Corporations.

CONSORTIUM.

See Husband and Wife.

CONSPIRACY.

- Evidence—admissibility of acts and declarations of co-conspirators. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
 Survival of action—conspiracy to restrain trade. Frohlich v. Deacon (Mich.), 722. Annotated

CONSTITUTION.

See Beneficial Associations.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

- Banks—statute providing for raising presumption of fraud against officers of insolvent bank—utility. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80.
 Billboards—validity of ordinance regulating. Thomas Cusack Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 488. Annotated
 Buildings—building ordinance held reasonable. Building Commission v. Kunin (Mich.), 959.
 Bulk sales law—validity. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.
 Confronting witnesses—private examination of witness in criminal case as reversible error. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 Decedents' estates—probate or administration fees—validity of statute prescribing. Malin v. Lamoure County (N. Dak.), 207. Annotated
 Due process of law—what constitutes. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.
 Eminent domain—statute conferring jurisdiction of eminent domain proceeding on public service commission—validity. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416. Annotated
 Evidence—ordinance making certain facts prima facie evidence—validity. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061. Annotated
 Fish and game—license to hunt game—validity of statute requiring. Bondi v. Mackay (Vt.), 130. Annotated
 Foreign corporations—validity of license tax or fee imposed on foreign corporation. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237. Annotated — validity of statute imposing license tax. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.
 Fuel—power of municipality to engage in business in furnishing fuel to inhabitants. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734. Annotated Hotels, etc.—validity of statute licensing hotels, lodging houses, or rooming houses. Cut-singer v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated
 Ice—power of municipality to operate ice plant. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274. Annotated Jury—right to jury trial—federal constitution as limiting state action. Middleton v. Whit-ridge (N. Y.), 856.
 — right to jury trial—final judgment on appeal as denial of right. Middleton v. Whit-ridge (N. Y.), 856.
 Labor laws—statute limiting hours of labor—validity. State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.
 Legislative power—scope. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734.
 Liens—removal of property subject to lien—validity of statute imposing damages. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.
Ann. Cas. 1916C.—82.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — Continued.

- Loggers' liens—persons furnishing supplies—validity of statute giving lien. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.
- Moving pictures—censorship of moving pictures—validity of state statute. Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Commission (U. S.), 296. Annotated
- statute prohibiting importation of prize fight films—validity. Weber v. Freed (U. S.), 317. Annotated
- Municipal corporations—encroachment on private enterprise—power of municipality. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734.
- ordinance supplementing statute—validity. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
- Police power—general scope. State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.
- meaning of term. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274.
- Public service corporations—legislative regulation of rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
- power of court to regulate rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
- Remedies—power of legislature to change. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.
- Sentence and punishment—capital punishment for assault with intent to rape—cruel and unusual punishment. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
- Statutes—partial invalidity of statute—effect. Malin v. Lamoure County (N. Dak.), 207.
- presumption in favor of statute. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734; State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.
- title and subject-matter—effect of subsequent codification. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.
- Taxation—exemption—power of legislature to exempt stock in foreign corporation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.
- extraterritorial effect of tax laws. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.
- limits on taxing power—public purchase. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274.
- property subject generally. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.
- property subject—security owned by domestic corporation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.
- property subject—stock in domestic corporation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.
- property subject—stock in foreign corporation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823. Annotated
- property subject—stock in foreign corporation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834. Annotated
- property subject—stock in foreign corporation. Hawley v. Malden (U. S.), 842. Annotated
- Witnesses—privilege against self-crimination—scope of constitutional provision. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- privilege against self-crimination—waiver of privilege as extending to subsequent proceeding. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009. Annotated
- privilege against self-crimination—waiver of privilege as subjecting witness to cross-examination. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- See also Taxation.

CONSTRUCTION.

See Accident Insurance; Bills and Notes; Landlord and Tenant; Mechanics' Liens; Mortgages; Municipal Corporations; Statutes; Street Railways; Treaties; Vendor and Purchaser; Wills.

CONTENTS.

Meaning of "contents" as used in will in connection with property bequeathed or devised Creamer v. Harris (Ohio), 1137.

CONTRACTS.

- Agency—usurious contract by agent—responsibility of principal. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321. Annotated
- Bids—deposit with bid—withdrawal of bid—rights of parties. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 425. Annotated
- Breach of contract—covenant against engaging in competing business—right to restrain breach by injunction. Marvel v. Jonah (N. J.), 185. Annotated
- right to restrain breach of contract by injunction. Marvel v. Jonah (N. J.), 185.
- stipulated forfeiture as penalty or liquidated damages. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.
- Building contracts—conclusiveness of architect's certificate. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- failure of owner to pay instalment—judgment for contractor—provision for paying subcontractor. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.

CONTRACTS — Continued.

- Building contracts—rescission by contractor—failure to pay instalment. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- right of contractor to instalment—delay in prosecuting work. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- right to payment—architect's certificate refused. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- termination for default of contractor—requisites of notice. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- termination for default of contractor—right of owner to complete work. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- time for completion of work—effect of waiver of stipulation as to time. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- time for completion of work—sufficiency of evidence to show waiver of time of performance. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- time for completion of work—validity of oral extension of time. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- Consideration—assignment of note—suit by assignee—right to question consideration of assignment. Sims v. Everett (Ark.), 629.
- Freedom of contract—intent of parties controls. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.
- Insurance—contract to provide funeral as insurance contract. Renschler v. State (Ohio), 1014. Annotated
- what constitutes insurance contract. State v. Universal Service Agency (Wash.), 1017. Annotated
- Nature of contract—sufficiency of evidence as to nature of contract. Chalvet v. Huston (D. C.), 1180.
- Promoters—liability of corporation on contracts of promoters. Turner v. Sinaloa Land, etc. Co. (Utah), 100. Annotated
- Public contract—liquidated damages—defenses to recovery—delay in other work. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.
- Telegraphs and telephones—contract for telephone service—termination of contract. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
- Validity—accident insurance—limitation of time to sue—validity. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447. Annotated
- contract liquidating damages—validity. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.
- infants—infancy as defense to action for money loaned. Leslie v. Sheill (Eng.), 992. Annotated
- infants—power to consent to issuance of liquor license. Matter of Farley (N. Y.), 494. Annotated
- infants—validity of contract of infant generally. Matter of Farley (N. Y.), 494.
- municipal corporations—right to construct improvement jointly with railroad company. Lord v. Denver (Colo.), 893. Annotated
- See also Breach of Promise of Marriage; Corporations; Life Insurance; Mechanics' Liens; Municipal Corporations.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

- Carriers of passengers—contributory negligence of passenger—extending arm outside of car. Malakia v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.), 1216. Annotated
- Defense—contributory negligence as affirmative defense. King v. Cooney-Eckstein Co. (Fla.), 163.
- Elevators—fall into elevator shaft—contributory negligence question for jury. Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- Forgetfulness of known danger as contributory negligence. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160.
- Infants—contributory negligence of children. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.
- Master and servant—fall of roof of mine—contributory negligence of miner. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.
- fall of roof of mine—instructions as to negligence and contributory negligence. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.
- Parent and child—contributory negligence of parent as imputed to child. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.

CONVERSION.

- Corporate stock—measure of damages for conversion. Hawkins v. Mellis, Pirie & Co. (Minn.), 640. Annotated

CONVICTS.

- Corporal punishment—right to inflict on convict. State v. Nipper (N. Car.), 126. Annotated
- Detention of convict after pardon—liability for false imprisonment. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.See Convicts.*CORPORATIONS.

- Assets—proof of value—opinion evidence. Hawkins v. Mellis, Pirie & Co. (Minn.), 640.
- Crimes—criminal liability of corporation for carrying liquors into Indian territory. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470. Annotated
- criminal liability of corporation for concealing property from trustee in bankruptcy. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466. Annotated
- criminal liability of corporation for obtaining money by false pretenses. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456. Annotated
- Foreign corporations—power of legislature to exempt stock in foreign corporation from taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.
- situs of stock of foreign corporation for purposes of taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.
- stock in foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823. Annotated
- stock in foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834. Annotated
- stock in foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Hawley v. Malden (U. S.), 842. Annotated
- validity of license tax or fee imposed on foreign corporation. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237. Annotated
- validity of statute imposing license tax on foreign corporation. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.
- Mortgage of property by corporation—ultra vires mortgage—annulment by court—return of consideration. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032.
- ultra vires mortgage—enforcement. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032.
- validity—failure to obtain consent of stockholders—right of creditor to object. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032. Annotated
- Notice—note given to corporation as security—notice of defenses—sufficiency of evidence. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
- Officers and employees—right of general manager to compensation for extra services. Tanner v. Sinaloa Land, etc. Co. (Utah), 100.
- Promoters—liability of corporation on contracts of promoters. Tanner v. Sinaloa Land, etc. Co. (Utah), 100. Annotated
- Public service corporations—legislative regulation of rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
- power of court to regulate rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
- Securities—security owned by domestic corporation as subject to taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.
- Stock and stockholders—conversion of stock—measure of damages. Hawkins v. Mellis, Pirie & Co. (Minn.), 640. Annotated
- situs of corporate stock for purposes of taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.
- stockholders' liability—assessment against stockholders—enforcement. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.
- stockholders' liability—assessment against stockholders—necessity of notice to stockholders. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.
- stockholders' liability—enforcement against estate of decedent. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.
- stockholders' liability—person holding stock as collateral security—liability of creditors. Way v. Barney (Minn.), 565. Annotated
- stockholders' liability—statute imposing double liability—acceptance of statute by becoming stockholder. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.
- stockholders' liability—when liability accrues. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.
- stock in domestic corporation as subject to taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS.See Commerce.*CORROBORATION.*See Confessions.*COSTS.

Fines and costs imposed in criminal proceeding—effect as lien on property of accused. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.

COUNSEL.See Misconduct of Counsel.*COUNTERCLAIM.*See Set-off.*COUNTIES.

Condemnation of property for widening road—liability of county commissioners for unnecessary injury to adjoining property. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35.
 Personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of county. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135. Annotated

COURTS.

Attorneys—summary control by court—transaction outside professional relation. Krickau v. Williams (R. I.), 1145.
 Creditors' bills—jurisdiction—waiver by failure to demur. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.
 Decisions—state court following federal decision—federal question. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237.
 Jury—power of court to exclude persons from jury service. Teat v. Land (La.), 1208. Annotated Opinions of courts as authority—advisory opinion. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734.
 Public service corporations—power of court to regulate rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc Co. (Colo.), 776.
 Title to property—jurisdiction of equity to determine. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654.
 Wills—jurisdiction of equity to construe will creating trust. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.
See also Discovery; Eminent Domain; Injunction; Trial.

COVENANTS.See Contracts; Deeds; Landlord and Tenant; Vendor and Purchaser.*CREDITORS' BILLS.

Jurisdiction of creditor's bill—waiver by failure to demur. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Abortion—expert evidence—effect of abortifacient—basis for testimony. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
 ——— necessity that drug administered be capable of producing intended effect. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
 ——— sentence not excessive. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
 ——— victim of abortion as accomplice. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627. Annotated Aider or abettor—prosecution before conviction of principal. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
 Assault—person assaulted on his own premises—right to repel attack without retreating. People v. Tomlins (N. Y.), 916. Annotated Bankruptcy—concealment of assets—criminal liability of corporation. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466. Annotated ——— concealment of assets—indictment as charging felony. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
 ——— Concealment of assets—sufficiency of evidence. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
 ——— concealment of assets—what constitutes offense. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
 Bigamy—competency of wife as witness in prosecution for bigamy. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054. Annotated Burglary—necessity of instructing as to circumstantial evidence. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318.
 ——— opening partly open door as burglary. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318. Annotated Conspiracy—admissibility of acts and declarations of co-conspirators. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
 Defenses—inducement to commit offense with view to prosecution therefor as defense to charge. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 728. Annotated ——— insanity as defense to charge of crime—test of responsibility. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 Distinction between felony and misdemeanor. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

- Embezzlement—restoration of property as defense to prosecution for embezzlement. State v. Baxter (Ohio), 60. Annotated
- Evidence—accomplice—competency of testimony. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
- accomplice—confession as sufficient corroboration. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568. Annotated
- accomplice—necessity of corroboration. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
- proof of other crimes—as incident to relevant evidence. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- proof of other crimes—to show motive. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- testimony at former trial of same defendant in criminal case—admissibility. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- False pretenses—corporation—criminal liability of corporation for obtaining money by false pretenses. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456. Annotated
- indictment—allegation as to intent. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456.
- obtaining loan of money as constituting crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Tingue v. State (Ohio), 1156.
- reliance on representation—what constitutes. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456.
- Homicide—defenses—death resulting from supervening cause. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685. Annotated
- degree fixed by statute—right of jury to convict of lower degree. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537. Annotated
- evidence—articles taken from accomplice. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- evidence—declarations of infant at time of homicide as part of res geste. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182. Annotated
- evidence—sufficiency to sustain verdict. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
- instructions—insanity as defense. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- instructions—offenses to be submitted. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
- instructions—power of jury to make recommendation of mercy. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- instructions—request not based on evidence—intent of accused. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- question for jury—shooting intentional or accidental. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685.
- what constitutes “lying in wait.” Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968. Annotated
- Incest—marriage of accused—sufficiency of evidence to show. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568.
- Indictment and information—mere surplusage as constituting variance. Tingue v. State (Ohio), 1156.
- validity of indictment—prosecutor member of grand jury. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422. Annotated
- Injunctions—power of equity to enjoin criminal prosecution. Sherod v. Aitchison (Ore.), 1151. Annotated
- right of state to enjoin private nuisance which is also crime. Laymaster v. Goodin (Mo.), 452. Annotated
- Intoxicating liquors—carrying liquor into Indian territory—what constitutes offense—sufficiency of indictment. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470. Annotated
- carrying liquor into Indian territory—criminal liability of corporation. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470. Annotated
- prosecution for violation of municipal ordinance—proof of other offenses. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
- Larceny—evidence—relation of accused and prosecutor. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422.
- Malicious mischief—evidence—sufficiency to sustain verdict. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
- indictment—sufficiency. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
- indictment—words sufficiently charging malice. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
- trial—rulings approved. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
- Preliminary examination—presumption supporting acts of magistrate. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- record of proceedings before examining magistrate—sufficiency of showing that defendant was appraised of rights. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- waiver of examination—effect. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- Sentence and punishment—capital punishment for assault with intent to rape—cruel and unusual punishment. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
- failure to interrogate accused before sentence—effect. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89. Annotated
- Trial—exclusion of public—discretion of court. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
- instructions—character of accused. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- instructions—definition of reasonable doubt. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422.
- private examination of witness in criminal case as reversible error. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
- See also Actions and Proceedings; Appeal and Error; Fines and Penalties; Grand Jury; Malicious Prosecution.

CROPS.

Landlord and tenant—estoppel to deny landlord's title—right to crops. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.

Parol reservation of growing crops—validity. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339. Annotated

Transfer of growing crop—part payment—statute of frauds. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

See Witnesses.

CROSS-PETITION.

See Pleading.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

See Sentence and Punishment.

CUSTOMS.

See Usages and Customs.

DAMAGES.

Breach of promise of marriage—abortion as element of damages. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.

— seduction as element of damages. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.

Conflict of laws—what law governs in assessment in damages for personal injuries. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.

Conversion—corporate stock—measure of damages. Hawkins v. Mellis, Pirie & Co. (Minn.), 640. Annotated

Death by wrongful act—measure of damages generally. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.

Eminent domain—damages for taking and injuring land—requisites of instruction. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35.

— value of fixtures as element of damages. Jackson v. State (N. Y.), 779.

False imprisonment—arrest by railroad policeman—liability of railroad—right to punitive damages. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513. Annotated

Impotency—necessity of pleading specially in action for damages. Hall v. Manufacturers'

Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375. Annotated

Inadequacy or excessiveness—alienation of affections—what is excessive verdict. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743. Annotated — assault and battery—what is excessive verdict. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248.

— death by wrongful act—what is excessive verdict. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.

— false imprisonment—what is excessive verdict. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503. Annotated

— false imprisonment—what is excessive verdict. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513. Annotated

— false imprisonment—what is excessive verdict. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519. Annotated

— malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248. Annotated

— malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. Seidler v. Burns (Conn.), 266. Annotated

— malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267. Annotated

— malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273. Annotated

— malpractice of surgeon—what is excessive verdict. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075. Annotated

— malpractice of surgeon—what is excessive verdict. Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081. Annotated

— personal injuries—what is excessive verdict. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.

— personal injuries—what is excessive verdict. Canadian Pacific Ry. v. Jackson (Can.), 912.

— telegraph case—what is excessive verdict for mental anguish. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521. Annotated Instruction on measure of damages—requiring verdict to be based on evidence. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503.

Landlord and tenant—eviction—damages for humiliation—sufficiency of evidence. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108.

Liquidated damages—breach of contract—stipulated forfeiture as penalty or liquidated damages. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.

— contract liquidating damages—validity. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.

DAMAGES — Continued.

Liquidated damages—public contract—liquidated damages—defenses to recovery—delay in other work. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.
 Malicious prosecution—elements of damage recoverable. Seidler v. Burns (Conn.), 266.
 ——— recovery of punitive damages. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 Personal injuries—measure of damages generally. King v. Cooney-Eckstein Co. (Fla.), 163.
 ——— measure of damages—loss of earning capacity. Miller v. Delaware River Trans. Co. (N. J.), 165.
 Remittitur—voluntary remittitur by plaintiff—effect as prejudicial to defendant. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075.
 Replevin—liability for unfounded suit—exemplary damages. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311.
 Telegraphs and telephones—disclosing contents of message—recovery of punitive damages. Purdy v. Western Union Tel. Co. (S. Car.), 726. Annotated
See also Appeal and Error; Life Estates.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT.

Damages—measure of damages generally. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
 ——— what is excessive verdict. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
 Evidence—complaints of suffering. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
 ——— domestic relations of deceased. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661. Annotated ——— ill health of deceased—inability to obtain insurance. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661. Annotated
 Illegitimate child—right of parent to sue for death.—Hadley v. Tallahassee (Fla.), 719. Annotated
 Limitations—commencement of running of statute of limitations against action for death by wrongful act. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707. Annotated
 Proximate cause of death—antecedent disease. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
 Unguarded mill race—liability of owner for death of trespassing child. Riggle v. Lens (Ore.), 1083. Annotated

DEATH MESSAGE.

See Telegraphs and Telephones.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

See Corporations; Creditors' Bills; Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances; Municipal Corporations; Stock and Stockholders; Suretyship.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES.

See Executors and Administrators.

DECISIONS.

See Appeal and Error; Courts.

DEEDS.

Covenant of warranty and against incumbrances—railroad right of way as breach of covenant. Schwartz v. Black (Tenn.), 1195.
 Evidence—administrator's deed—admissibility as muniment of title—necessity for producing letters of administration. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.
 Purchase-money mortgage—priority over deed. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956. Annotated

DE FACTO JUDGES.

See Elections.

DE FACTO OFFICERS.

See Public Officers.

DEGREES.

See Homicide.

DELAY.

See Telegraphs and Telephones.

DEL CREDERE AGENTS.

See Agency.

DELIVERY.

See Gifts.

DEMURRER.

See Appeal and Error; Pleading.

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

See Dismissal and Nonsuit.

DEPOSITIONS.

Practice—notice to parties of taking deposition. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

DEPOSIT.

See Bids.

DEPOSITS.

See Banks.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Inheritance from adopted child—estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child. Russell v. Jordan (Colo.), 760. Annotated

—— right of inheritance as between natural and adopted parent. Carpenter v. Buffalo General Electric Co. (N. Y.), 754. Annotated

DESSERTION.

See Divorce.

DIARIES.

Private diary as evidence. Arnold v. Hussey (Me.), 715.

Annotated

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See Verdict.

DISABLED PERSONS.

See Carriers of Passengers.

DISCOVERY.

Privilege—transcript of court proceedings as privileged from inspection. Lambert v. Home (Eng.), 872. Annotated

DISCRETION.

See Trial.

DISCRIMINATION.

See Telegraphs and Telephones.

DISEASE.

Death by wrongful act—proximate cause of death—antecedent disease. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.

See also Evidence; Wills.

DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT.

Demurrer to evidence—what error considered. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc., Co. (Mo.), 375.

Motion to dismiss properly denied. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.

See also Appeal and Error; Malicious Prosecution.

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Keeping of bawdy house—right of state to enjoin. Laymaster v. Goodin (Mo.), 452.

Annotated

Validity of fire insurance policy on bawdy house and furniture therein. Dominion Fire Ins. Co. v. Nakata (Can.), 1963. Annotated

DISTRICTS.

See Elections.

DIVORCE.

Desertion—conduct of wife not justifying. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.

—— offer to return after lapse of statutory period. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.

DIVORCE — Continued.

- Desertion—refusal of reconciliation. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
 ——— sufficiency of evidence. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
 ——— want of reasonable excuse. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
 ——— what constitutes desertion. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
 Pleading—cross-petition as admission. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
 Separation—separation agreement as bar to action for divorce. Canning v. Canning (Vt.), 344. Annotated ——— separation agreement as bar to action for divorce. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360. Annotated ——— separation agreement as bar to action for divorce. McCoy v. McCoy (W. Va.), 367. Annotated

DOCKS.

See Wharves.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

See Death by Wrongful Act.

DRUGS.

See Food and Drugs.

DRUNKENNESS.

- Intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession. Lindsey v. State (Fla.), 1167. Annotated

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law.

DYING DECLARATIONS.

- Foundation of admission of dying declarations—manner of making preliminary questions. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685.

EARNING CAPACITY.

See Damages.

EARNINGS.

See Average Weekly Earnings.

EASEMENTS.

- Covenant of warranty and against incumbrances—railroad right of way as breach. Schwartz v. Black (Tenn.), 1195.
 Tax sale as extinguishing private easement. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636. Annotated Valuation of property for taxation—effect of easement. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.

EDUCATION.

See Schools.

ELECTIONS.

- Election at single public place in municipality—validity. People v. Graham (Ill.), 391.
 Election districts in municipality—formation—construction of statutes. People v. Graham (Ill.), 391.
 Judges of election—validity of acts of de facto judges. People v. Graham (Ill.), 391.
 See also Actions.

ELECTRICITY.

- Municipal electric light plant—personal injury arising from operation—liability of municipality. Saulman v. Mayor, etc. (Tenn.), 1254.

ELEVATORS.

- Fall into elevator shaft—contributory negligence as question for jury. Blair v. Seitzer Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

- Restoration of property as defense to prosecution for embezzlement. State v. Barter (Ohio), 60. Annotated

EMINENT DOMAIN.

- Collateral attack on eminent domain proceeding. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35 Annotated
- Damages—instructions—damages for taking and injuring land. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35.
- value of fixtures as element of damages. Jackson v. State (N. Y.), 779. Annotated
- Injury to adjoining property—widening road—liability of county commissioners for unnecessary injury to adjoining property. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35.
- Origin and scope of power. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416.
- Proceeding—requisites of proceeding—impartial tribunal. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416.
- Public service commission—judicial power with respect to eminent domain proceeding after award by public service commission. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416.
- statute conferring jurisdiction of eminent domain proceeding on public service commission—validity. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416. Annotated
- Relation of condemnor to owner. Jackson v. State (N. Y.), 779.
- Title—when title passes to land condemned for widening road. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35.
- Vacation of street—persons entitled to compensation. German Evangelical, etc. Cong. v. Mayor, etc. (Md.), 231. Annotated

EQUITABLE ELECTION.

See Wills.

EQUITABLE INTERESTS.

See Attachment.

EQUITY.

See Courts; Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances; Injunctions; Pleading.

ESTOPPEL.

- Landlord and tenant—estoppel to deny landlord's title—right to crops. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.
- Nuisances—estoppel to object to structure as nuisance—consent to erection of structure. Mahoney Land Co. v. Cayuga Investment Co. (Wash.), 1234. Annotated
- Ordinances—estoppel to enforce ordinance. Building Commission v. Kunin (Mich.), 959.
- Set-off—estoppel of bankrupt to set up counterclaim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated
- Taxation—estoppel of taxpayer to question validity of tax. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214. Annotated
- estoppel of taxpayer to recover back tax—listing property for taxation. Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227. Commercial Annotated

EVICITION.

See Landlord and Tenant.

EVIDENCE.

- Accomplices—competency of testimony of accomplice. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
- necessity of corporation of testimony of accomplice. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
- Admissions and declarations—admissions in open court—effect. McCoy v. McCoy (W. Va.), 367.
- conspiracy—admissibility of acts and declarations of co-conspirators. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- infants—declaration of infant at time of homicide as part of res gestæ. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182. Annotated
- pleading—cross-petition as admission. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
- res gestæ—scope of doctrine of res gestæ generally. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182.
- self-serving declaration properly excluded. Barfield v. Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- workmen's compensation act—admissibility of declarations of injured workman as to cause of injury. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771. Annotated
- Breach of promise of marriage—understanding of family as evidence of promise to marry. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
- Brokers—compensation—admissibility of evidence as to financial ability of purchaser. Sotham v. Macomber (Mich.), 694.
- Burden of proof—ordinance—burden of showing invalidity of ordinance. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956.
- personal injuries—burden of proof as to cause of injury. Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- Burglary—necessity of instructing as to circumstantial evidence. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318.

EVIDENCE—Continued.

- Confessions—confession as sufficient corroboration of accomplice. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568. Annotated
- intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession. Lindsey v. State (Fla.), 1167. Annotated
- Death by wrongful act—evidence—complaints of suffering. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- evidence—domestic relations of deceased. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661. Annotated
- evidence—ill health of deceased—inability to obtain insurance. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- Deeds—administrator's deed—admissibility as muniment of title—necessity for producing letters of administration. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.
- Depositions—practice—notice to parties of taking. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- Diaries—private diary as evidence. Arnold v. Hussey (Me.), 715. Annotated
- Dying declarations—foundation for admission in evidence—manner of making preliminary questions. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685.
- Expert and opinion evidence—abortion—effect of abortifacient—basis for testimony. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.
- admissibility of evidence as to possibility of curing disease. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- admissibility of opinion that person appeared sick. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- correspondence of logs with stumps. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
- hypothetical questions—assumption of unproved fact. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.
- proof of value of corporate assets. Hawkins v. Mellis, Pirie & Co. (Minn.), 640.
- subjects of opinion evidence—ultimate issue in case. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115.
- False imprisonment—arrest by railroad policeman—liability of railroad—proof of motive in making arrest. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
- Former testimony—testimony at former trial of same defendant in criminal case—admissibility. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- Hearsay evidence—statement of unexecuted intention. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521.
- Homicide—evidence—articles taken from accomplice. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- Hospital charts—hospital chart as evidence. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74. Annotated
- hospital chart as evidence. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- Intoxicating liquors—prosecution for violation of municipal ordinance—proof of other offenses. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
- Judicial notice—properties of gasoline. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818.
- Larceny—evidence—relation of accused and prosecutor. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422.
- Lost instruments—loss of official document—mode of proof. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519.
- Malicious prosecution—evidence—injury to credit. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
- evidence—wealth of defendant. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
- want of probable cause—termination of original prosecution as evidence. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
- Maps—ancient map—admissibility in evidence. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173. Annotated
- Master and servant—workmen's compensation act—report by employer to commission—effect as evidence. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.
- Medical books—admissibility in evidence of extracts from medical books. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- Objections to evidence—general objection—evidence partly admissible. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182.
- objection too broad. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- time for objecting. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- Parol evidence—boundaries—establishment of boundary line by parol agreement. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.
- reformation of instruments—admissibility of parol evidence of mistake. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.
- wills—admissibility of parol evidence to identify legatee under will. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071.
- Physicians and surgeons—malpractice—evidence—amount of charge for services. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- malpractice—evidence—experience of surgeon. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- malpractice—evidence—failure of another physician to cure. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- malpractice—evidence—negligence in performance of operation. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- Presumption—appeal and error—presumption that verdict rests on proven facts. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061

EVIDENCE — Continued.

- Presumption—fraud—statute providing for raising presumption of fraud against officers of insolvent bank—validity. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80.
- insanity—exercise of legal presumption of sanity. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- insanity—presumption of insanity from insanity of ancestor. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
- preliminary examination—presumption supporting acts of magistrate. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
- statutes—presumption in favor of statute. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734; State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.
- undue influence—persons engaged to be married—presumption of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025. Annotated
- Prima facie evidence—ordinance making certain facts prima facie evidence—validity. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061. Annotated
- Primary and secondary evidence—admissibility of testimony as to contents of letter from hearing letter read. Chalvet v. Huston (D. C.), 1180.
- Proof of other crimes—as incident to relevant evidence. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- to show motive. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- Relevancy—admissibility of evidence to rebut inference. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- Survey—admissibility of unofficial survey in evidence. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.
- Usages and customs—local significance of word—admissibility of evidence to show. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654. Annotated
- Weight and sufficiency—bankruptcy—concealment of assets—sufficiency of evidence. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
- benefit insurance—immoral relation between insured and beneficiary—sufficiency of evidence. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.
- wills and notes—note given to corporation as security—notice of defenses—sufficiency of evidence. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
- building contract—time for completion of work—sufficiency of evidence to show waiver of time of performance. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.
- contracts—sufficiency of evidence as to nature of contract. Chalvet v. Huston (D. C.), 1180.
- desertion—sufficiency of evidence. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360.
- gift causa mortis—sufficiency of evidence of fraud. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
- gift causa mortis—sufficiency of evidence of gift. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
- gift causa mortis—sufficiency of evidence of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
- gift inter vivos—sufficiency of evidence of gift. Hoyt v. Gillen (Mich.), 812.
- handwriting—weight of opinion evidence as to handwriting. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
- homicide—sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
- incest—marriage of accused—sufficiency of evidence to show. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568.
- judgments—tender of payment of judgment—sufficiency of evidence. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527.
- landlord and tenant—eviction—damages for humiliation—sufficiency of evidence. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108.
- landlord and tenant—eviction—use of excessive force—sufficiency of evidence. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108.
- malicious mischief—sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
- malicious prosecution—sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267; McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
- municipal corporations—action to recover interest on city warrants—sufficiency of evidence to establish accord and satisfaction. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573.
- reformation of instrument—sufficiency of evidence of mistake as question for jury. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.
- release and discharge—fraud in procuring release of liability for injuries—sufficiency of evidence. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707.
- testamentary capacity—sufficiency of evidence of incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
- undue influence—sufficiency of evidence to raise issue of undue influence in will contest. Coffey v. Miller (Ky.), 30.
- usury—clear proof essential. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321.
- Wills—testamentary capacity—admissibility of statement by witness that he had observed no change in testator's condition. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
- Witnesses—impeachment—admissibility of stenographic report of previous testimony. Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968.
- See also Appeal and Error; Damages; Wills.

EXAMINATION OF TITLE.

See Judicial Sales.

EXCEPTIONS.

See Appeal and Error; Instructions.

EXCISE TAXES.Meaning of "excise tax." Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237.EXCITABILITY.

See Wills.

EXCLUSION OF PUBLIC.

See Trial.

EXECUTIONS.Property subject to execution—land held in trust. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.Appointment—mistress of testator—propriety. Deeble v. Alerton (Colo.), 863.Deed of administrator—admissibility as muniment of title—necessity for producing letters of administration. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.Limitation of actions—bar of limitations as available against administrator. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.); 707.Mortgage of realty—power of executor to mortgage land of testator. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601. *Annotated*Probate or administration fees—validity of statute prescribing. Malin v. Lamoure County (N. Dak.), 207. *Annotated*Sale of realty—court order for sale—sufficiency of description. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.— power of executor to sell lands of testator. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.— rights of lessee of realty. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.Stockholders' liability—enforcement against estate of decedent. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.Widow's allowance—effect of voluntary separation on right to allowance. Deeble v. Alerton (Colo.), 863. Annotated— nature of allowance. Deeble v. Alerton (Colo.), 863.EXPERT EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

EXPERT WITNESSES.

See Witnesses.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.Blasting—liability for injury to property by concussion or vibration. Louden v. Cincinnati (Ohio), 1171. *Annotated*Judicial notice of properties of gasoline. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818.Storage of gasoline as nuisance. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818. *AnnotatedFALSE IMPRISONMENT.Arrest by railroad policeman—liability of railroad—proof of motive in making arrest. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.— liability of railroad—right to punitive damages. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.Detention of convict after pardon—liability as for false imprisonment. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503.Excessive damages—what is excessive verdict in action for false imprisonment. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503. Annotated— what is excessive verdict in action for false imprisonment. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513. Annotated— what is excessive verdict in action for false imprisonment. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519. *Annotated*Instructions approved. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519.Issues—truth of charge. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519.FALSE PRETENSES.Corporations—criminal liability of corporation for obtaining money by false pretenses. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456. *Annotated*Defenses—inducement to commit offense with view to prosecution therefor. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456. Annotated

FALSE PRETENSES — Continued.

Indictment—allegation as to intent. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456.
 Loan of money—obtaining loan of money as constituting crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Tingue v. State (Ohio), 1156.
 Reliance on representation—what constitutes. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 456.

FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

See Constitutional Law.

FEDERAL COURTS.

See Courts.

FEEES.

See Taxation.

FELONIES.

Distinction between felony and misdemeanor. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 See also Actions and Proceedings; Bankruptcy.

FIDELITY INSURANCE.

Premium paid in advance for fidelity policy—right to recover unearned portion. Crouch v. Southern Surety Co. (Tenn.), 1220. Annotated

FIGHTING.

See Accident Insurance.

FILMS.

See Moving Pictures.

FINAL JUDGMENTS.

See Appeal and Error.

FINDINGS.

See Appeal and Error; Trial.

FINES AND PENALTIES.

Breach of contract—stipulated forfeiture as penalty or liquidated damages. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.
 Fines and costs imposed in criminal proceedings—effect as lien on property of accused. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.
 See also Appeal and Error.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Stipulation for forfeiture for vacancy—effect of subsequent occupancy. Dolliver v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. (Me.), 765. Annotated ——— waiver of forfeiture. Dolliver v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. (Me.), 765.

FISH AND GAME.

Statute requiring license to hunt game—right of alien to license. Bondi v. Mackay (Vt.), 130.
 ——— validity of statute. Bondi v. Mackay (Vt.), 130. Annotated

FIXTURES.

Eminent domain proceeding—value of fixtures as element of damages. Jackson v. State (N. Y.), 779. Annotated

FOOD AND DRUGS.

See Abortion; Municipal Corporations.

FOOLISH CONDUCT.

See Wills.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

Possession under claim of right—peaceful entry—right of action. Mastin v. May (Minn.), 403.

FORECLOSURE.

See Mortgages; Taxation.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

- Licenses—validity of license tax or fee imposed on foreign corporation. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237. Annotated — validity of statute imposing license tax on foreign corporation. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.
 Taxation—power of legislature to exempt stock in foreign corporation from taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.
 — situs of stock of foreign corporation for purposes of taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.
 — stock in foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823. Annotated
 — stock in foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834. Annotated — stock of foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Hawley v. Malden (U. S.), 842. Annotated

FOREIGN LAWS.

See Taxation.

FORFEITURES.

See Bail; Contracts; Fire Insurance.

FRANCHISES.

See Street Railways.

FRAUD.

- Actionable fraud—inducing performance of personal services without intent to pay. Hunt v. Lewis (Vt.), 170. Annotated — representations as to future facts. Hunt v. Lewis (Vt.), 170.
 Gift causa mortis—sufficiency of evidence of fraud. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 Life insurance—incontestability clause—right to attack policy for fraud. Philadelphia Life Ins. Co. v. Arnold (S. Car.), 706.
 Presumptions—statute providing for raising presumption of fraud against officers of insolvent bank—validity. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80.
 Process—personal service of process procured by fraud—validity. Crandall v. Trowbridge (Iowa), 608. Annotated Release and discharge—fraud in procuring release of liability for injuries—sufficiency of evidence. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

- Boundaries—establishment of boundary line by parol agreement. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.
 Crops—parol reservation of growing crops—validity. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339. Annotated — transfer of growing crops as within statute of frauds. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.
 Effect of statute—oral contract as defense. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.

FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES.

- Bulk sales law—action by creditor under law—necessary parties. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.
 — remedy of creditor in equity. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923. Annotated — validity of statute. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.
 — waiver of rights by creditor. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

See Contracts.

FUEL.

See Municipal Corporations.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

See Judgments.

FUTURE FACTS.

See Fraud.

GAME.

See Fish and Game.

GASOLINE.

Judicial notice of properties of gasoline. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818.
 Storage of gasoline as nuisance. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818. Annotated

GIFTS.

Gifts causa mortis—acquiescence by person interested as laches. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 — gift to person to whom donor is engaged to be married—presumption of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025. Annotated — promissory note—sufficiency of delivery. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 — requisites—delivery. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 — sufficiency of evidence of fraud. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 — sufficiency of evidence of gift. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 — sufficiency of evidence of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 — validity of gift. Baber v. Caples (Oregon), 1025.
 Gift inter vivos—parol gift of mortgage—validity. Hoyt v. Gillen (Mich.), 812. Annotated — sufficiency of evidence of gift. Hoyt v. Gillen (Mich.), 812.

GRAND JURY.

Power to reassemble grand jury after discharge. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205. Annotated Validity of indictment by grand jury of which prosecutor is member. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422. Annotated

GUARDIANS.

Power of guardian to sell personal property of ward. Echols v. Speake (Ala.), 332. Annotated

HANDWRITING.

Weight of opinion evidence as to handwriting. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

HOMICIDE.

Defenses—death resulting from supervening cause. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685. Annotated — insanity as defense—test of responsibility. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 Degree fixed by statute—right of jury to convict of lower degree. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537. Annotated Evidence—articles taken from accomplice. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 — dying declarations—foundation for admission in evidence—manner of making preliminary questions. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685.
 — res gestæ—declarations of infant at time of homicide as res gestæ. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182. Annotated — sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
 Instructions—insanity as defense—sufficiency of instructions. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 — offenses to be submitted. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
 — recommendation of mercy—instructions relating to power of jury. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 — request not based on evidence—intent of accused. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 Question for jury—shooting intentional or accidental. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685.
 What constitutes "lying in wait." Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968. Annotated
 See also Appeal and Error.

HOSPITALS AND ASYLUMS.

Charts—hospital chart as evidence. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74. Annotated — hospital chart as evidence. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
 Malpractice by surgeon—liability of hospital. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

HOTELS.

Validity of statute licensing hotels, lodging houses, or rooming houses. Cutsinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated

HOURS OF LABOR.

See Labor Laws.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

- Alienation of affections—damages—what is excessive verdict. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743. Annotated
- right of action by wife for alienation of affections of husband. Nieberg v. Cohen (Vt.), 476.
- right of action by wife for alienation of affections of husband. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743. Annotated
- Equitable election—election by husband to take under wife's will—acts constituting elections. Colored Industrial School (Ohio), 1198. Annotated
- Imprisonment of husband—right of wife to recover. Nieberg v. Cohen (Vt.), 476. Annotated
- Personal injuries to wife—recovery by husband for loss of services. Blair v. Seitzer Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- right of wife to sue without joining husband. Blair v. Seitzer Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- statute giving wife right to action—right of husband to recover for loss of consortium. Blair v. Seitzer Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882. Annotated
- Separation agreement—effect on right to widow's allowance. Deeble v. Alerton (Colo.), 863. Annotated
- separation agreement as bar to action for divorce. Canning v. Canning (Vt.), 344. Annotated
- separation agreement as bar to action for divorce. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 360. Annotated
- separation agreement as bar to action for divorce. McCoy v. McCoy (W. Va.), 867. Annotated
- Witnesses—competency of wife as witness in prosecution for bigamy. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS.

See Evidence; Witnesses.

ICE.

- Municipal corporation—power to operate ice plant. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274. Annotated

ILLEGAL CONTRACTS.

See Contracts.

ILLEGITIMACY.

- Right of parent to sue for death of illegitimate child. Hadley v. Tallahassee (Fla.), 719. Annotated

ILL HEALTH.

See Death by Wrongful Act.

IMMUNITY.

See Witnesses.

IMPOTENCY.

- Action for personal injuries—necessity of pleading impotency specially. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375. Annotated

IMPRISONMENT.

See False Imprisonment; Husband and Wife.

IMPROVEMENTS.

See Mechanics' Liens; Municipal Corporations.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence.

INCEST.

- Marriage of accused—sufficiency of evidence to show. Knowles v. State (Ark.), 568.

INCONTESTABILITY CLAUSE.

See Life Insurance.

INCUMBRANCES.

See Taxation.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Scaffold erected for painting building—injury to pedestrian—negligence of independent contractor—liability of owner. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115. Annotated

INDIANS.

Carrying liquors into Indian territory—criminal liability of corporation. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470. Annotated

— what constitutes offense—sufficiency of indictment. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470.

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

See Criminal Law; False Pretenses; Malicious Mischief.

INDUCEMENT.

See Criminal Law.

INFANTS.

Adoption—inheritance from adopted child—estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child. Russell v. Jordan (Colo.), 760. Annotated — inheritance from adopted child—right of inheritance as between natural and adopted parents. Carpenter v. Buffalo General Electric Co. (N. Y.), 754. Annotated

Claim against municipality—limitation of time for filing—infancy as excuse for failure to file. Murphy v. Fort Edward (N. Y.), 1040. Annotated

Contracts—infancy as defense to action for money loaned. Leslie v. Sheill (Eng.), 992. Annotated — power to consent to issuance of liquor license. Matter of Farley (N. Y.), 494. Annotated — validity of contract of infant. Matter of Farley (N. Y.), 494. Annotated

Contributory negligence of children. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135. Annotated

Declarations—declaration of infant at time of homicide as res gestæ. State v. Lasceki (Ohio), 1182. Annotated

Mill race—liability of owner for death of trespassing child. Riggle v. Lens (Ore.), 1083. Annotated

Witnesses—competency of infant. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422. Annotated

INFERENCE.

See Evidence.

INHERITANCE.

See Descent and Distribution; Life Estates.

INJUNCTIONS.

Breach of contract—right to restrain by injunction. Marvel v. Jonah (N. I.), 185. Annotated — right to restrain breach of covenant against engaging in competing business. Marvel v. Jonah (N. I.), 185. Annotated

Carriers of passengers—enforcement of right to carriage by injunction. Hogan v. Nashville Interurban R. Co. (Tenn.), 1162. Annotated

Criminal prosecution—power of equity to enjoin. Sherod v. Aitchison (Ore.), 1151. Annotated

Nuisances—private nuisance which is also crime—right of state to enjoin. Laxmaster v. Goodwin (Mo.), 452. Annotated

Ordinances—prosecution under municipal ordinance—right to enjoin. Cutsinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated

— right of municipality to enjoin violation of ordinance. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956. Annotated

INNKEEPERS.

Validity of statute licensing hotels, lodging houses, or rooming houses. Cutsinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated

See also Taverns.

INSANITY.

Criminal law—insanity as defense to charge of crime—test of responsibility. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537. Annotated

Homicide—insanity as defense—sufficiency of instructions. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537. Annotated

Presumptions—existence of legal presumption of sanity. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537. Annotated — presumption of insanity from insanity of ancestor. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated

Testamentary capacity—effect of insane delusion with respect to relative. Dibble v. Currier (Ga.), 1. Annotated

INSANITY — Continued.

- Testamentary capacity—effect of insane delusion with respect to relative. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated — effect of insane delusion with respect to relatives. Coffey v. Miller (Ky.), 30. Annotated — effect of insane delusion with respect to relatives. In re Alexander's Estate (Pa.), 33. Annotated

INSOLVENCY.

- Statute providing for raising presumption of fraud against officers of insolvent bank—validity. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80. Annotated
 When bank is insolvent. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80. Annotated

INSTALMENTS.

See Building Contracts.

INSTRUCTIONS.

- Certain instruction approved. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.
 Exception to charge—sufficiency. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318.
 Exception to refusal of instruction—sufficiency. State v. Lapoint (Vt.), 318.
 Instruction not based on evidence—refusal proper. Taylor v. Northern Coal, etc. Co. (Wis.), 167.
 Refusal of certain instructions approved. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.
 Requested instruction covered by general charge—refusal proper. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205; Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466; Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
 Requested instruction given in substance—refusal proper. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160; Miller v. Delaware River Trans. Co. (N. J.), 165; Taylor v. Northern Coal, etc. Co. (Wis.), 167; Patterson v. State (Ala.), 468.
 See also Appeal and Error; Criminal Law; Damages; Homicide; Insanity; Master and Servant; Witnesses.

INSULTING LANGUAGE.

See Carriers of Passengers.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

See Insurance.

INSURANCE.

- Accident insurance—construction of policy—reduction of benefits. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447. Annotated
 — limitation of time to sue—waiver of limitation. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447. Annotated — limitation of time to sue—validity. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447. Annotated — recovery for injury received while fighting. Hutton v. States Accident Ins. Co. (Ill.), 577. Annotated Benefit insurance—beneficiaries—designation in by-laws. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.
 — beneficiaries—immoral relation between insured and beneficiary—sufficiency of evidence. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.
 — beneficiaries—selection by insured of beneficiary not having insurable interest—public policy. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584. Annotated — beneficiaries—statement in constitution as restrictive. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584.
 Burial insurance—contract to provide funeral as insurance contract. Renschler v. State (Ohio), 1014. Annotated Contract—what constitutes insurance contract. State v. Universal Service Agency (Wash.), 1017. Annotated
 Fidelity insurance—premium paid in advance—right to recover unearned portion. Crouch v. Southern Surety Co. (Tenn.), 1220. Annotated Fire insurance—stipulation for forfeiture for vacancy—effect of subsequent occupancy. Dolliver v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. (Me.), 765. Annotated — stipulation for forfeiture for vacancy—waiver of forfeiture. Dolliver v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. (Me.), 765. Annotated — validity of policy on bawdy house and furniture therein. Dominion Fire Ins. Co. v. Nakata (Can.), 1063. Annotated
 Life insurance—incontestability clause—right to attack policy for fraud. Philadelphia Life Ins. Co. v. Arnold (S. Car.), 706. Annotated — incontestability clause—validity. Philadelphia Life Ins. Co. v. Arnold (S. Car.), 706. Annotated
 — insurable interest—selection by injured person of beneficiary not having insurable interest—public policy. Christenson v. Madson (Minn.), 584. Annotated

INTENT.

See Contracts; Evidence; False Pretenses; Homicide; Wills.

INTEREST.

Bail bond—forfeiture—allowance of interest on penalty. People v. Parisi (N. Y.), 111.

Interest as recoverable separately from principal. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573. Annotated

Warrants—action to recover interest on city warrants—sufficiency of evidence to establish accord and satisfaction. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573.

—right to interest on city warrants. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573. Annotated

See also Usury.

INTERMEDIATE COURTS.

See Appeal and Error.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Foreign corporations—foreign corporation doing interstate and domestic business—power of state to levy license tax. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.

—foreign corporation engaged wholly in interstate commerce—power of state to impose license tax. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.

—validity of license tax or fee imposed on foreign corporation—validity. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237. Annotated

Moving pictures—censorship of moving pictures—validity of state statute. Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Commission (U. S.), 296. Annotated

—statute prohibiting importation of prize fight films—validity. Weber v. Freed (U. S.), 317. Annotated

See also Commerce.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Indians—carrying liquors into Indian territory—criminal liability of corporation. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470. Annotated —carrying liquors into Indian territory—what constitutes offense—sufficiency of indictment. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (U. S.), 470.

Infants—power to consent to issuance of liquor license. Matter of Farley (N. Y.), 494. Annotated

Municipal ordinance relating to intoxicating liquors—prosecution for violation—proof of other offenses. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.

“Premises” of school within intoxicating liquor statute—meaning of term. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189. Annotated “Tavern” within intoxicating liquor statute—meaning of term. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189.

INTOXICATION.

See Drunkenness.

JOINDER.

See Actions; Parties to Actions.

JUDGES.

See Appeal and Error; Elections; Trial.

JUDGMENTS.

Action on judgment—effect of right to appeal from judgment. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620.

—when full faith and credit attaches. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620. Annotated

—when statute of limitations begins to run. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620. Annotated Enforcement—when judgment may be enforced. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620.

Nonresident—personal judgment against nonresident—validity. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.

Payment—tender of payment of judgment—effect. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527. Annotated —tender of payment of judgment—sufficiency of evidence. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527.

Res judicata—conclusiveness of judgment—failure of plaintiff to appeal. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.

—matters concluded—claim for wrongful attachment in action in which judgment is obtained. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.

—matters concluded generally. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.

—matters concluded—jurisdictional facts. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.

—matters concluded—matters not in issue. Ex parte Logan (Ala.), 405; Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.

See also Appeal and Error; Building Contracts.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

Judicial notice of properties of gasoline. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818.

JUDICIAL SALES.

Rights of purchaser—time to examine title. Smith v. Smith (S. Car.), 763. Annotated

JURISDICTION.

See Courts; Judgments.

JURY.

Challenges—procedure in challenging. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.

Disqualification—loaning money to assist prosecution of criminal case. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.

Exclusion from jury service—power of court to exclude persons from jury service. Teat v. Land (La.), 1208. Annotated

Right to jury trial—federal constitution as limiting state action. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.

—final judgment on appeal as denial of right. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856.

Witnesses—juror at former trial as competent witness. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674. Annotated

See also Appeal and Error; Grand Jury.

LABOR LAWS.

Hours of labor—statute limiting hours of labor—validity. State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.

LACHES.

Gift causa mortis—acquiescence by person interested as laches. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.

Set-off—laches of bankrupt as barring counterclaim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983. Annotated

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Estoppel to deny landlord's title—right to crops. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339.

Eviction—damages for humiliation—sufficiency of evidence. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108.

—use of excessive force—sufficiency of evidence. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108.

Mechanics' liens—improvements by tenant with consent of owner—right to mechanic's lien. Stewart v. Talbott (Colo.), 1116. Annotated Municipal lease—limitation of time for which property may be leased—statute or ordinance not retroactive. Burns v. New York (N. Y.), 1093.

Personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of lessee. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160. Annotated

Relation of landlord and tenant—servant occupying premises as part of compensation—relation as tenant of owner. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108. Annotated

Renewal of lease—covenant for perpetual renewal—construction. Burns v. New York (N. Y.), 1093. Annotated Repairs—failure of landlord to repair—liability for injury to third person. Ryall v. Kidwell (Eng.), 815.

Sale of realty by executor—rights of lessee of realty. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.

Use of premises—right of tenant to use wall of building for advertising. Snyder v. Kulesh (Iowa), 481. Annotated

LARCENY.

Evidence—relation of accused and prosecutor. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422.

LEADING QUESTIONS.

See Witnesses.

LEASES.

See Landlord and Tenant; Moving Pictures.

LETTERS.

See Evidence.

LICENSES.

"Excise tax"—meaning of term. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237.

Fish and game—statute requiring license to hunt game—right of alien to license. Rondi v. Mackay (Vt.), 130.

LICENSES—Continued.

- Fish and game—statute requiring license to hunt game—validity of statute. Bondi v. Mackay (Vt.), 130.
 Foreign corporations—validity of license tax or fee imposed on foreign corporation. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237. Annotated ——— validity of statute imposing license tax. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.
 Hotels, lodging houses, or rooming houses—validity of statute licensing. Custinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated
 See also Intoxicating Liquors.

LIENS.

- Fines and costs imposed in criminal proceeding—effect as lien on property of accused. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.
 Loan of purchase money of land—right of lender to lien on land. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956.
 Purchase-money mortgage—priority over other liens or claims. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943. Annotated ——— priority over other liens or claims. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956. Annotated Removal of property subject to lien—validity and purpose of statute imposing damages. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.
 Unrecorded mortgage—effect as against subsequent liens. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.
 See also Chattel Mortgages; Logs and Lumber.

LIFE ESTATES.

- Injury to remainder—right of life tenant to recover damages. Rogers v. Atlantic, etc. Co. (N. Y.), 877. Annotated

LIFE INSURANCE.

- Incontestability clause—right to attack policy for fraud. Philadelphia Life Ins. Co. v. Arnold (S. Car.), 706.
 ——— validity of incontestability clause. Philadelphia Life Ins. Co. v. Arnold (S. Car.), 706.
 Insurable interest—selection by injured person of beneficiary not having insurable interest—public policy. Christenson v. Madison (Minn.), 584. Annotated
 See also Death by Wrongful Act.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

- Accident insurance—limitation of time to sue—validity. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447.
 ——— limitation of time to sue—waiver of limitation. Bates v. German Commercial Acc. Co. (Vt.), 447. Annotated Conflict of laws—what statute of limitations governs. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.
 Death by wrongful act—commencement of running of statute of limitations. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707. Annotated Executors and administrators—bar of limitations as available against administrator. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707.
 Judgments—when statute of limitations begins to run against action on judgment. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620. Annotated
 Municipal corporations—limitation of time for filing claim against—infancy as excuse for failure to file. Murphy v. Fort Edward (N. Y.), 1040. Annotated Pleading statute of limitations—waiver of defect in plea. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.
 Statutory right of action—bar of statute of limitations as extinguishing right of action as well as remedy. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.
 ——— limitations applicable. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

See Damages.

LISTING PROPERTY.

See Taxation.

LOANS.

See False pretenses; Infants; Liens.

LOCAL SIGNIFICANCE.

See Usages and Customs.

LODGES.See Schools.LODGING HOUSES.

Validity of statute licensing hotels, lodging houses, or rooming houses. Cutsinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated

LOGS AND LUMBER.

Expert evidence—correspondence of logs with stumps. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
 Logger's lien—by whom and for what labor lien may be claimed. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191. Annotated —persons furnishing supplies—validity of statute giving lien. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho.), 191.

LOST INSTRUMENTS.

Loss of official document—mode of proof. Howell v. Wyoar (W. Va.), 519.

LYING IN WAIT.

Homicide—what constitutes "lying in wait." Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968. Annotated

MAGISTRATES.See Criminal Law.MAJORITY.See Partnership.MALICE.

Act lawful in itself—notice immaterial. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311; Hutton v. Watters (Tenn.), 433. Annotated

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

Evidence—sufficiency to sustain verdict. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
 Indictment—sufficiency. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
 —words sufficiently charging malice. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
 Trial—rulings approved. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Damages—elements of damage recoverable. Seidler v. Burns (Conn.), 266.
 —excessive damages—what is excessive verdict. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248. Annotated —excessive damages—what is excessive verdict. Seidler v. Burns (Conn.), 266. Annotated —excessive damages—what is excessive verdict. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 287. Annotated —excessive damages—what is excessive verdict. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273. Annotated —recovery of punitive damages—recovery in action for malicious prosecution. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 —right of plaintiff to recover attorney's fee. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 Defenses—insufficiency of original complaint. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 Distinction between malice and want of probable cause. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 Elements necessary to support action. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 Evidence—admissibility of evidence respecting injury to credit. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 —admissibility of evidence respecting wealth of defendant. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 —sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.
 —want of probable cause—sufficiency of evidence. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 —want of probable cause—termination of original prosecution as evidence. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.
 Joinder of causes of action. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co. (Minn.), 267.
 Termination of prosecution—what constitutes—voluntary dismissal of criminal charge. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273.

MALPRACTICE.See Physicians and Surgeons.

MANDAMUS.

Refund of illegal tax—mandamus to compel. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227.

Restoration to office—mandamus as appropriate remedy. Chace v. City Council (R. I.), 1257.

MAPS.

Ancient map—admissibility in evidence. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.

Annotated

MARRIAGE.

See Breach of promise of Marriage; Incest; Undue Influence.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Acts of servants—liability of carrier for insulting language by employee to passenger. Haile v. New Orleans R. etc. Co. (La.), 1233.

—liability of master—arrest by railroad policeman—evidence of motive. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.

—wrongful arrest by railroad policeman—action against railroad—recovery of punitive damages. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.

Contract of employment—servant occupying premises as part of compensation—relation as tenant of owner. Lane v. Au Sable Electric Co. (Mich.), 1108. Annotated Injuries to servants—fall of roof of mine—contributory negligence of miner. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.

—fall of roof of mine—instructions as to negligence and contributory negligence. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.

—fall of roof of mine—liability of master—Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.

—injury from defect in wharf—liability of owner to employee of third person. Taylor v. Northern Coal, etc. Co. (Wis.), 167. Annotated

—workmen's compensation act—admissibility of evidence—declarations of injured workman as to cause of injury. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771. Annotated

—workmen's compensation act—applicability of rules of judicial procedure. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.

—workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cue v. Port of London Authority (Eng.), 887.

—workmen's compensation act—report by employer to commission—effect as evidence. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.

See also Appeal and Error; Labor Laws.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

See Damages.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

Contract for improvements made by agent of owner—right to mechanic's lien—construction of statute. Stewart v. Talbott (Colo.), 1116.

Improvements by tenant with consent of owner—right to mechanic's lien. Stewart v. Talbott (Colo.), 1116. Annotated

MEDICAL BOOKS.

Admissibility in evidence of extracts from medical books. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

MENTAL ANGUISH.

See Damages.

MERGER.

See Actions and Proceedings.

MESSAGES.

See Telegraphs and Telephones.

MINES AND MINERALS.

Injury to servant—fall of roof of mine—contributory negligence of miner. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.

—fall of roof of mine—instructions as to negligence and contributory negligence. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.

—fall of roof of mine—liability of master. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.

MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

Necessity of objection to misconduct of counsel. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
See also Appeal and Error.

MISDEMEANORS.

Distinction between felony and misdemeanor. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89

MISTAKE.

Reformation of instruments—admissibility of parol evidence of mistake. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.
 — sufficiency of evidence of mistake as question for jury. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.
 Wills—mistake of fact as nullifying operation of will. Dibble v. Carrier (Ga.), 1.
See also Taxation.

MISTRESS.

See Executors and Administrators.

MONEY.

See False Pretenses.

MONOMANIA.

See Wills.

MONOPOLIES.

Covenant against engaging in competing business—right to restrain breach by injunction. Marvel v. Jonah (N. J.), 186. Annotated Survival of actions—conspiracy to restrain trade. Frohlich v. Deacon (Mich.), 722. Annotated

MOOT QUESTIONS.

See Actions and Proceedings.

MORTGAGES.

Construction—note and mortgage security construed together. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 Corporate mortgages—failure to obtain consent of stockholders—right of creditor to object. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032. Annotated — ultra vires mortgage—affirmation by court—return of consideration. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032.
 — ultra vires mortgage—enforcement. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032.
 Executors and administrators—power of executor to mortgage land of testator. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601. Annotated Foreclosure—defenses—payment of note secured by mortgage. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 — redemption from foreclosure. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527.
 Gifts—parol gift of mortgage—validity. Hoyt v. Gillen (Mich.), 812. Annotated
 Note secured by mortgage—right to maintain separate actions on note and mortgage. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.
 Purchase-money mortgage—priority over deed. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956. Annotated — priority over other liens or claims. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943. Annotated Recording—unrecorded mortgage—effect as against subsequent liens. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.
 — unrecorded mortgage—valid between parties. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.
 Trusts and trustees—power of trustee to mortgage trust property. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601. Annotated

MORTUARY TABLES.

See Witnesses.

MOTIONS.

See Appeal and Error.

MOTIVE.

See Criminal Law; Malice.

MOVING PICTURES.

- Censorship of moving pictures—validity of state statute. Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Commission (U. S.), 296. Annotated
- Lease of moving picture films—rights of parties. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311. Annotated
- Statute prohibiting importation of prize fight films—validity. Weber v. Froe (U. S.), 317. Annotated

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

- Billboards—validity of ordinance regulating. Thomas Cusack Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 488. Annotated
- Buildings—construction of building ordinance. Building Commission v. Kunin (Mich.), 959. Annotated
- ordinance held reasonable. Building Commission v. Kunin (Mich.), 959.
- Claims—limitation of time for filing—infancy as excuse for failure to file. Murphy v. Fort Edward (N. Y.), 1040. Annotated
- necessity for presentation. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573.
- Contracts—necessity of record. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573.
- Electric light plant—personal injury arising from operation—liability of municipality. Saulman v. Mayor, etc. (Tenn.), 1254. Annotated
- Evidence—ordinance making certain facts prima facie evidence—validity. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061. Annotated
- Fuel—power of municipality to engage in business in furnishing fuel to inhabitants. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734. Annotated
- Ice—power of municipality to operate ice plant. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Rusten (La.), 1274. Annotated
- Improvements—right of municipality to construct improvement jointly with railroad company. Lord v. Denver (Colo.), 893. Annotated
- Intoxicating liquors—prosecution for violation of municipal ordinance—proof of other offenses. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
- Lease of property—limitation of time for which property may be leased—statute or ordinance not retroactive. Burns v. New York (N. Y.), 1093. Annotated
- Officers—removal—city council having authority to remove—power to appoint committee to conduct hearing. Saulman v. Mayor (Tenn.), 1254. Annotated
- removal—power of municipality to remove—milk inspector. Chace v. City Council (R. I.), 1257.
- Ordinances—burden of showing invalidity of ordinance. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956. Annotated
- estoppel to enforce ordinance. Building Commission v. Kunin (Mich.), 959.
- ordinance supplementing statute—validity. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
- right of municipality to enjoin violation of ordinance. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956. Annotated
- right to enjoin prosecution under ordinance. Cutsinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280.
- Powers generally—right to encroach on private enterprise. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734.
- Railroads—repair of road—power of municipality to compel. State v. Louisiana, etc. R. Co. (La.), 1170. Annotated
- Streets—liability of municipality for tort committed in cleaning streets. Mayor, etc. v. Jordan (Ga.), 240. Annotated
- res ipsa loquitur—pedestrian struck by falling cornice. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- scaffold erected for painting building—injury to pedestrian—negligence of independent contractor—liability of owner. Weillacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115. Annotated
- vacation of street—persons entitled to compensation. German Evangelical, etc. Cong. v. Mayor, etc. (Md.), 231. Annotated
- Warrants—action to recover interest on city warrants—sufficiency of evidence to establish accord and satisfaction. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573. Annotated
- authorization—future indebtedness. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573. Annotated
- interest on city warrants. Alabama City, etc. R. Co. v. Gadsden (Ala.), 573. Annotated
- Wharves—personal injury from defect in wharf—liability of municipality. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160. Annotated

See also Appeal and Error; Elections.

MONUMENT OF TITLE.

See Deeds.

MURDER.

See Appeal and Error; Homicide.

NAMES.

Action to quiet title—variance of names in chain of title—effect. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

See also Amendments; Bonds.

NEGLIGENCE,

- Assault—person injuring bystander while acting in self-defense—liability as for negligence. Shaw v. Lord (Okla.), 1147. Annotated
- Assumption of risk as affirmative defense. King v. Cooney-Eckstein Co. (Fla.), 163.
- Attorneys—action for negligence of attorney—joinder of plaintiffs. Noziaska v. Aten (S. Dak.), 589.
- Automobiles—liability of manufacturer of automobile to purchaser for defect therein. MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (N. Y.), 440.
- Burden of proof as to cause of personal injury. Blair v. Seitzner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- Carriers of passengers—contributory negligence of passenger—extending arm outside of car. Malakia v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.), 1216. Annotated
- duty to carry disabled person. Hogan v. Nashville Interurban R. Co. (Tenn.), 1162.
- duty to passenger taken sick in transit. Middleton v. Whitridge (N. Y.), 856. Annotated
- duty to provide safe place for delivery of baggage to passenger. Johnson v. Florida East Coast R. Co. (Fla.), 1210. Annotated
- enforcement of right to carriage by injunction. Hogan v. Nashville Interurban R. Co. (Tenn.), 1162.
- liability of carrier for insulting language by employee to passenger. Haile v. New Orleans R. etc. Co. (La.), 1233.
- Contributory negligence—contributory negligence as affirmative defense. King v. Cooney-Eckstein Co. (Fla.), 163.
- contributory negligence of children. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.
- contributory negligence of parent as imputed to child. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.
- forgetfulness of known danger as contributory negligence. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160.
- Death by wrongful act—damages—measure of damages generally. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- evidence—complaints of suffering. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- evidence—domestic relations of deceased. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661. Annotated
- evidence—ill health of deceased—ability to obtain insurance. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- illegitimate child—right of parent to sue for death. Hadley v. Tallahassee (Fla.), 719. Annotated
- limitation of actions—commencement of running of statute of limitations against action for death by wrongful act. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707. Annotated
- proximate cause of death—antecedent disease. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.
- Electricity—municipal electric light plant—personal injury arising from operation—liability of municipality. Saulman v. Mayor, etc. (Tenn.), 1254.
- Elevators—fall into elevator shaft—contributory negligence as question for jury. Blair v. Seitzner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- Explosions and explosives—blasting—liability for injury to property by concussion or vibration. Louden v. Cincinnati (Ohio), 1171. Annotated
- Husband and wife—personal injuries to wife—recovery by husband for loss of services. Blair v. Seitzner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- personal injuries to wife—right of wife to sue without joining husband. Blair v. Seitzner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882.
- personal injuries to wife—statute giving wife right to action—right of husband to recover for loss of consortium. Blair v. Seitzner Dry Goods Co. (Mich.), 882. Annotated
- Landlord and tenant—failure of landlord to repair—liability for injury to third person. Ryall v. Kidwell (Eng.), 815.
- Life estates—injury to remainder—right of life tenant to recover damages. Rogers v. Atlantic, etc. Co. (N. Y.), 877. Annotated
- Master and servant—fall of roof of mine—contributory negligence of miner. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.
- fall of roof of mine—instructions as to negligence and contributory negligence. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.
- fall of roof of mine—liability of master. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.
- workmen's compensation act—admissibility of evidence—declarations of injured workman as to cause of injury. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—applicability of rules of judicial procedure. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.
- workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cue v. Port of London Authority (Eng.), 887.
- workmen's compensation act—report by employer to commission—effect as evidence. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.
- Owners of premises—unguarded mill race—liability of owner for death of trespassing child. Riggle v. Lens (Ore.), 1083. Annotated

NEGLIGENCE—Continued.

- Physicians and surgeons—degree of responsibility assumed in treating patient. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097. Annotated
- malpractice—admissibility of evidence—amount of charge for services. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097. Annotated
- malpractice—admissibility of evidence—experience of surgeon. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- malpractice—admissibility of evidence—failure of another physician to cure. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- malpractice—admissibility of evidence—negligence in performance of operation. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- malpractice—for what injuries liable. Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081.
- malpractice—liability of hospital. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097. Annotated
- malpractice—proof of negligence—res ipsa loquitur. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075.
- malpractice—what constitutes. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075.
- operation—consent as affecting right to perform. Barfield v. South Highland Infirmary (Ala.), 1097. Annotated
- Questions of law or fact—negligence as question for jury. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.
- Streets and highways—cleaning streets—liability of municipality for tort committed in cleaning streets. Mayor, etc. v. Julian (Ga.), 240. Annotated
- res ipsa loquitur—pedestrian struck by falling cornice. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 361.
- scaffold erected for painting, building—liability to pedestrian—negligence of independent contractor—liability of owner. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115. Annotated
- widening road—liability of county commissioners for unnecessary injury to adjoining property. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 55. Annotated
- Telegraphs and telephones—delay of death message—negligence as question for jury. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521.
- delay of death message—prohibitive consequence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521.
- disclosing contents of message—liability of telegraph company. Purdy v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Ark.), 521.
- Waste—what constitutes—negligent injury by third person. Rogers v. Atlantic, etc. Co. (N. Y.), 877.
- Waterworks and water companies—underground water pipes—liability for injuries. Charing Cross Electricity Supply Co. v. Hydraulic Supply Co. (Eng.), 1046.
- Wharves—personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of carrier of goods to person receiving freight. Miller v. Delaware River Trans. Co. (N. J.), 165. Annotated
- personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of county. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135. Annotated
- personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of lessee. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160. Annotated
- personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of municipality. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160. Annotated
- personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of owner to employee of third person. Taylor v. Northern Coal, etc. Co. (Wis.), 167. Annotated
- See also Appeal and Error; Damages.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEW TRIAL.

- Separation of white and colored pupils for purposes of education. Tucker v. Blase (S. Car.), 796. Annotated
- Who is "colored" person. Tucker v. Blase (S. Car.), 796.
- Newly discovered evidence—right of appellate court to entertain motion for new trial. State v. Salisbury Ice, etc. Co. (N. Car.), 728.
- See also Appeal and Error.

NONRESIDENTS.

See Judgments.

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

- Power of notary to issue warrant. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519.
- Powers of notary generally. Howell v. Wysor (W. Va.), 519.

NOTES.

See Bills and Notes; Building Contracts; Depositions; Stock and Stockholders; Suretyship; Taxation.

NUISANCES.

Estoppel to object to structure as nuisance — consent to erection of structure. Mahoney Land Co. v. Cayuga Investment Co. (Wash.), 1234. Annotated

Gasoline — storage of gasoline as nuisance. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818. Annotated

Private nuisance — definition. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818.
 — private nuisance which is also crime — right of state to enjoin. Laymaster v. Goodin (Mo.), 452. Annotated

OBJECTIONS.

See Appeal and Error; Evidence; Misconduct of Counsel; Witnesses.

OBLIGEE.

See Bonds.

OCCUPANCY.

See Fire Insurance.

OFFICERS.

See Corporations; Public Officers.

OPERATIONS.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

OPINION EVIDENCE.

See Appeal and Error; Evidence.

ORDERS.

See Executors and Administrators.

ORDINANCES.

See Appeal and Error; Municipal Corporations.

OTHERWISE.

Meaning of term. Townsley v. Hartsfield (Ark.), 643. Annotated

OVERSEERS OF POOR.

See Poor and Poor Laws.

OWNERS OF PREMISES.

Scaffold erected for painting building — injury to pedestrian — negligence of independent contractor — liability of owner. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115. Annotated

Unguarded mill race — liability of owner for death of trespassing child. Riggle v. Lens (Ore.), 1083. Annotated

PARDONS.

Detention of convict after pardon — liability as for false imprisonment. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503.

Pardon effective on delivery and acceptance. Weigel v. McCloskey (Ark.), 503.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Adoption — inheritance from adopted child — estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child. Russell v. Jordan (Colo.), 760. Annotated

— inheritance from adopted child — right of inheritance as between natural and adopted parents. Carpenter v. Buffalo General Electric Co. (N. Y.), 754. Annotated

Contributory negligence of parent as imputed to child. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.

Death by wrongful act — illegitimate child — right of parent to sue for death. Hadley v. Tallahassee (Fla.), 719. Annotated

PAROL EVIDENCE.

Boundaries — establishment of boundary line by parol agreement. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.

Reformation of instruments — admissibility of parol evidence of mistake. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.

PAROL EVIDENCE—Continued.

Wills—admissibility of parol evidence to identify legatee under will. Baumann v. Steinger (N. Y.), 1071.

PAROL GIFTS.

See Gifts.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS.

Amendments—right to amend complaint by adding new parties plaintiff. Noziska v. Aten (S. Dak.), 589. Annotated

—right to amend complaint by changing capacity in which plaintiff sues from representative to personal capacity. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398. Annotated —right to amend complaint by changing names of parties. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

—statute permitting amendment—construction. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

Bulk sales law—action by creditor under law—necessary parties. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.

Joinder of plaintiffs—action for negligence of attorney. Noziska v. Aten (S. Dak.), 589.

See also Appeal and Error; Taxation.

PARTNERSHIP.

Action by partnership—death of members—continuation in name of survivors. Sweetser v. Fox (Utah), 620.

Majority of partners—power to bind firm. Reirden v. Stephenson (Vt.), 109. Annotated

Municipal corporations—right to construct improvement jointly with railroad company. Lord v. Denver (Colo.), 893. Annotated

Power of partner to bind firm. Tanner v. Sinaloa Land, etc. Co. (Utah), 100; Reirden v. Stephenson (Vt.), 109.

PARTY WALLS.

Termination of right to maintenance of party wall—destruction of wall. Commercial National Bank v. Eccles (Utah), 360. Annotated

PASSENGERS.

See Carriers of Passengers.

PAUPERS.

See Poor and Poor^H Laws.

PAYMENT.

Mortgages—foreclosure—payment of note as defense. Des Moines Savings Bank v. Arthur (Iowa), 498.

See also Appeal and Error; Building Contracts; Frauds, Statute of; Taxation; Tender.

PEDESTRIANS.

See Streets and Highways.

PENALTIES.

See Bail; Fines and Penalties.

PENSIONS.

Effect of admission of pensioner to soldiers' home. Mason v. Board of Managers (Mich.), 848. Annotated

PER CAPITA.

See Wills.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

See Damages.

PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

See Judgments.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

See Guardians.

PERSONAL SERVICE.

See Fraud; Process.

PERSONS.

Who is "colored" person. Tucker v. Blease (S. Car.), 796.

PER STIRPES.

See WILLS.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Degree of responsibility assumed in treating patient. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

Malpractice—admissibility of evidence—amount of charge for services. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

—admissibility of evidence—experience of surgeon. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

—admissibility of evidence—failure of another physician to cure. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

—admissibility of evidence—negligence in performance of operation. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

—damages—what is excessive verdict. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075.

—damages—what is excessive verdict. Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081. Annotated —for what injuries liable. Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081. Annotated —liability of hospital. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.

—proof of negligence—res ipsa loquitur. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075.

—what constitutes malpractice. Craghead v. McCullough (Colo.), 1075.

Operation—consent as affecting right to perform. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097. Annotated Privileged communications—physician and patient—waiver by patient. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.

See also Medical Books.

PIERS.

See Wharves.

PIPES.

See Waterworks and Water Companies.

PLEADING.

Amendments—right to amend complaint by adding new parties plaintiff. Noziska v. Aten (S. Dak.), 589. Annotated

—right to amend complaint by changing capacity in which plaintiff sues from representative to personal capacity—validity. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398. Annotated —right to amend complaint by changing names of parties. Hardy v. E. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

—statute permitting amendment—construction. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

Answer—necessity of answer—questions not reached by demurrer. Crouch v. Southern Surety Co. (Tenn.), 1220.

Creditors' bills—jurisdiction—waiver by failure to demur. Coffey v. McGahey (Mich.), 923.

Cross-petition as admission. Tipton v. Tipton (Iowa), 960.

Demurrer—scope and effect. Johnson v. Florida East Coast R. Co. (Fla.), 1210.

—sufficiency of specification. Johnson v. Florida East Coast R. Co. (Fla.), 1210.

Impotency—necessity of pleading specially in action for damages for personal injuries. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375. Annotated Limitation of actions—pleading statute of limitations—waiver of defect in plea. Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.), 74.

Replevin—pleading—plaintiff's ownership not denied. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311.

Replication—equity—effect of want of replication. McCoy v. McCoy (W. Va.), 367.

PLEDGE.

See Stock and Stockholders.

POLICE OFFICERS.

See Police Officers.

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law.

POOR AND POOR LAWS.

- Duty to furnish aid to pauper — notice to overseer of poor. Waitsfield v. Craftsbury (Vt.), 387.
 Overseer of poor — powers. Waitsfield v. Craftsbury (Vt.), 387.
 Reimbursement of town furnishing aid to pauper — statutory notice — sufficiency. Waitsfield v. Craftsbury (Vt.), 387.
 Who is "poor person." Waitsfield v. Craftsbury (Vt.), 387. Annotated

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

See Criminal Law.

PREMISES.

- "Premises" of school within intoxicating liquor statute — meaning of term. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189. Annotated

PREMIUMS.

See Fidelity Insurance.

PRESUMPTIONS.

- Appeal and error — presumption that verdict rests on proven facts. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.
 Fraud — statute providing for raising presumption of fraud against officers of insolvent bank — validity. Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80.
 Insanity — existence of legal presumption of sanity. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 — presumption of insanity from insanity of ancestor. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 Preliminary examination — presumption supporting acts of magistrate. State v. Mewhinney (Utah), 537.
 Statutes — presumption in favor of statute. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734; State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.
 Undue influence — persons engaged to be married — presumption of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025. Annotated

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

See Agency.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

See Suretyship.

PRINCIPALS.

See Criminal Law.

PRISONS AND PRISONERS.

See Convicts.

PRIVATE DIARIES.

See Diaries.

PRIVATE NUISANCES.

See Nuisances.

PRIVILEGE.

See Discovery; Witnesses.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

- Attorney and client — communication in presence of third person as privileged. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071.
 — communication in regard to testamentary matters as privilege. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071. Annotated — communication to attorney held not privileged. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
 Physician and patient — waiver of privilege by patient. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
 Stenographer — confidential communication to stenographer, as privileged. Sotham v. Macomber (Mich.), 694. Annotated
Ann. Cas. 1916C.—84.

PRIZE FIGHTS.

See Moving Pictures.

PROBABLE CAUSE.

See Malicious Prosecution.

PROBATE.

See Wills.

PROCEDURE.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

PROCESS.Personal service of process procured by fraud—validity. Crandall v. Trowbridge (Iowa), 608. *Annotated*Service of process by leaving at residence—validity. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248.PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

See Discovery.

PROMOTERS.

See Corporations.

PROOF OF OTHER CRIMES.

See Criminal Law.

PROTEST.

See Taxation.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

See Negligence.

PUBLIC CONTRACTS.Deposit of bid—withdrawal of bid—rights of parties. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 425. *Annotated*Liquidated damages—defenses to recovery—delay in other work. Parker-Washington Co. v. Chicago (Ill.), 337.Municipal corporations—right to construct improvement jointly with railroad company. Lord v. Denver (Colo.), 893. *AnnotatedPUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

See Municipal Corporations.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.Railroad policemen—effect of expiration of term. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—responsibility of railroad for acts. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—right to summon bystanders to assist in making arrest. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—status as de facto officers. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—term of office. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—time for qualifying. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—wrongful arrest—action against railroad—proof of motive. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.—wrongful arrest—liability of railroad—punitive damages. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.Removal—city council having authority to remove—power to appoint committee to conduct hearing. Saulman v. Mayor (Tenn.), 1254. Annotated—power of municipality to remove—milk inspector. Chace v. City Council (R. I.), 1257.Restoration to office—mandamus as appropriate remedy. Chace v. City Council (R. I.), 1257.Vacancy in office—death before commencement of term. Townley v. Hartsfield (Ark.), 643.PUBLIC POLICY.

See Insurance.

PUBLIC SERVICE.What constitutes "public service" for purposes of taxation. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

Judicial power with respect to eminent domain proceeding after award by public service commission. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416.
 Statute conferring jurisdiction of eminent domain proceeding on public service commission—validity. George v. Consolidated Lighting Co. (Vt.), 416. Annotated

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Legislative regulation of rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
 Power of court to regulate rates. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.

PUNISHMENT.

See Convicts; ~~Sentences~~ and Punishment.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

See Damages; ~~and~~ PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

PUPILS.

See Schools.

PURCHASE-MONEY MORTGAGES.

See Mortgages.

QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

Homicide—question for jury—shooting intentional or accidental. People v. Kane (N. Y.), 685.
 Negligence as question for jury. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.
 Reformation of instruments—sufficiency of evidence of mistake as question for jury. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.
 Telegraphs and telephones—delay of death message—negligence as question for jury. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 324.

QUIETING TITLE.

Action to quiet title—variance of names in chain of title—effect. Hardy v. Woods (S. Dak.), 398.

RAILROADS.

Construction of improvement—right of municipality to construct improvement jointly with railroad company. Lord v. Denver (Colo.), 893. Annotated Railroad policemen—effect of expiration of term. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — responsibility of railroad for acts. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — right to summon bystanders to assist in making arrest. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — status as de facto officers. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — term of office. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — time for qualifying. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — wrongful arrest—action against railroad—proof of motive. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 — wrongful arrest—liability of railroad—punitive damages. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513.
 Repair of road—power of municipality to compel. State v. Louisiana, etc. R. Co. (La.), 1170. Annotated

See also Easements.

RAPE.

Capital punishment for assault with intent to rape—cruel and unusual punishment. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.

RATES.

See Public Service Corporations.

REAL PROPERTY.

Action held to involve title to realty. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.
See also Attachment; Executions.

REASONABLE DOUBT.

See Criminal Law.

RESCUE.

See Appeal and Error; Criminal Law; Municipal Corporations.

RECORDING ACTS.

Unrecorded mortgage—effect as against subsequent liens. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.
 ——— valid between parties. Western Tie, etc. Co. v. Campbell (Ark.), 943.

REDEMPTION.

See Mortgages; Taxation.

REFUNDING TAXES.

See Taxation.

RELATIVES.

See Wills.

RELEASE AND DISCHARGE.

Fraud in procuring release of liability for injuries—sufficiency of evidence. Causey v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. Car.), 707.

RELIANCE.

See False Pretences.

REMAINDERS AND REVERSIONS.

Injury to remainder—right of life tenant to recover damages. Rogers v. Atlantic, etc. Co. (N. Y.), 877. Annotated

REMEDIES.

See Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances.

REMITTITUR.

See Damages.

REMOVAL.

See Public Officers.

RENEWAL.

See Landlord and Tenant.

REPAIRS.

See Landlord and Tenant.

REFLEVING.

Liability for unfounded suit—exemplary damages. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311.
 Pleading—plaintiff's ownership not denied. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311.

REPLICATION.

See Pleading.

REPORT.

See Workmen's Compensation Act.

REPRESENTATIONS.

See False Pretences; Fraud.

RESCISSION, CANCELLATION AND REFORMATION.

Reformation of instruments—admissibility of parol evidence of mistake. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.

——— reformation of bond by changing name of obligor. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180. Annotated ——— sufficiency of evidence of mistake as question for jury. Archer v. McClure (N. Car.), 180.

Rescission of building contracts by contractor—failure to pay instalment. American-Hawaiian Eng. etc. Co. v. Butler (Cal.), 44.

RES GESTAE.

See Evidence.

REFERENCE.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

See Negligence; Physicians and Surgeons.

RES JUDICATA.

Conclusiveness of judgment—failure of plaintiff to appeal. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.

Matters concluded—claims for wrongful attachment in action in which judgment has obtained. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.

—jurisdictional facts. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.

—matters concluded generally. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.

Matters concluded—matters not in issue. Ex parte Logan (Ala.), 405; Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.

RESTORATION OF PROPERTY.

See Embezzlement; Larceny.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

See Monopolies.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

RETREAT.

See Self-defense.

RIGHT OF WAY.

See Easements.

ROOMING HOUSES.

Validity of statute licensing hotels, lodging houses, or rooming houses. Cutsinger v. Atlanta (Ga.), 280. Annotated.

RULES.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

SALES.

See Guardians; Tenants in Common.

SANITY.

See Insanity.

SCHOOL.

See Owners of Premises.

SCHOOLS.

"Premises" of school within intoxicating liquor statute—meaning of term. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189. Annotated.

Separation of white and colored pupils for purposes of education. Tucker v. Blease (S. Car.), 796. Annotated.

Use of school building for lodge meeting—power of authorities to permit. Cost v. Shinault (Ark.), 483. Annotated.

SECURITIES.

See Bills and Notes; Taxation.

SEDUCTION.

Breach of promise of marriage—seduction as element of damages. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.

SELF-CRIMINATION.

See Witnesses.

SELF-DEFENSE.

See Assault.

SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

See Admissions and Declarations.

SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT.

Abortion—sentence not excessive. State v. Shaft (N. Car.), 627.

Failure to interrogate accused before sentence—effect. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.

Rape—capital punishment for assault with intent to rape—cruel and unusual punishment. Ann. Cas.
Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.

See also Appeal and Error; Convicts.

SEPARATION.

See Husband and Wife.

SEPARATION OF RACES.

See Schools.

SERVICE OF PROCESS.

See Process.

SET-OFF.

Bankruptcy—estoppel of bankruptcy to set up counterclaim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.

—— laches of bankrupt as barring counterclaim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.

—— right of set-off under American bankruptcy acts. Morris v. Windsor Trust Co. (N. Y.), 972.

—— right to set off unliquidated claim. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.

—— set-off by bank of deposit against debt due bank—effect as voidable transfer under bankruptcy law. Pindel v. Holgate (U. S.), 983.

Claims not connected with cause of action—right of set-off. Morris v. Windsor Trust Co. (N. Y.), 972.

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES.

See Police Officers.

SICK PASSENGERS.

See Passengers.

SIDE TRACKS.

See Street Railways.

SOLDIERS' HOMES.

See Army and Navy.

SPECIFICATION.

See Pleading.

SPIRITUALISM.

See Wills.

STATE COURTS.

See Courts.

STATES.

Relation of states to each other. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Frauds, Statute of.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See Limitation of Actions.

STATUTES.

Construction—adopted statute. Russell v. Johnson (Mo.), 760.

—— directory or mandatory statutes. People v. Graham (Ill.), 391.

—— legislative intent. Denver v. Hobbs (Colo.), 823.

—— re-enactment of statute as adopting prior construction. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214.

Presumption in favor of statute. Laughlin v. Portland (Me.), 734; State v. Bunting (Ore.), 1003.

Partial invalidity of statute—effect. Adair v. Towner County (N. Dak.), 207.

STATUTES—Continued.

Repeal—implied repeal—certain statutory provisions held not to be repealed. Borok v. Birmingham (Ala.), 1061.

Title and subject-matter—effect of subsequent codification. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.

See also Landlord and Tenant; Mechanics' Liens; Taxation.

STENOGRAPHERS.

See Privileged Communications; Witnesses.

STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

Conversion of stock—measure of damages. Hawkins v. Mellis, Pirie & Co. (Minn.), 640.

Mortgage of property by corporation—validity—failure to obtain consent of stockholders—right of creditor to object. Dillon v. Myers (Colo.), 1032.

Stockholders' liability—assessment against stockholders—necessity of notice to stockholders. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.

—enforcement against estate of decedent. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.

—person holding stock as collateral security. Way v. Barney (Minn.), 565.

—statute imposing double liability—acceptance of statute by becoming stockholder. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.

—when liability accrues. Johnson v. Libby (Me.), 681.

Taxation—power of legislature to exempt stock in foreign corporation from taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.

—situation of corporate stock for purposes of taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.

—situation of stock of foreign corporation for purposes of taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.

—stock of domestic corporation as subject to taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.

—stock of foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.

—stock of foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.

—stock of foreign corporation as subject to taxation. Hawley v. Malden (U. S.), 842.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Franchise granted to street railway—strict construction against grantee. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. v. Steers (N. Y.), 791.

Power of street railway to construct side tracks. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. v. Steers (N. Y.), 791.

STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

Cleaning street—liability of municipality for tort committed in cleaning streets. Mayor, etc. v. Jordan (Ga.), 240.

Injuries to pedestrians—res ipsa loquitur—pedestrian struck by falling cornice. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 661.

—scaffold erected for painting building—injury to pedestrian—negligence of independent contractor—liability of owner. Weilbacher v. J. W. Putts Co. (Md.), 115.

Vacation of street—persons entitled to compensation. German Evangelical, etc. Cong. v. Mayor, etc. (Md.), 231.

Widening road—liability of county commissioners for unnecessary injury to adjoining property. Pettit v. County Commissioners (Md.), 35.

See also Street Railways.

STUMPS.

See Logs and Lumber.

SUBCONTRACTORS.

See Building Contracts.

SUCCESSION.

See Descent and Distribution.

SUFFERING.

See Death by Wrongful Act.

SUMMARY CONTROL.

See Attorneys.

SUPERVENING CAUSE.

See Homicide.

SURETYSHIP.Appeal bond—liability of sureties—effect of abandonment of appeal. Woodle v. Settlemyer (Ore.), 1222. *Annotated*Bail bond—forfeiture—necessity of notice to surety to produce principal. People v. Parisi (N. Y.), 111.Discharge of surety—notice to creditor to sue principal—sufficiency of notice. Sims v. Everett (Ark.), 629. *AnnotatedSURGEONS.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

SURPLUSAGE.

See Criminal Law.

SURVEY.Admissibility of unofficial survey in evidence. Bunger v. Grimm (Ga.), 173.SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS.

See Actions and Proceedings.

SUSPENSION.

See Actions and Proceedings.

TAVERNS."Tavern" within intoxicating liquor statute—meaning of term. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189.TAXATION.Estoppel of taxpayer to question validity of tax. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 214. Annotated"Excise tax"—meaning of term. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237.Exemption from taxation—power of legislature to exempt stock in foreign corporation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.Extraterritorial effect of tax laws. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.Limits on taxing power—public purchase. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274.Probate or administration fees—validity of statute prescribing. Malin v. Lamoure County (N. Dak.), 207. *Annotated*Property subject to taxation—generally. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.— security owned by domestic corporation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.— stock in domestic corporation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.— stock in foreign corporation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823. Annotated— stock in foreign corporation. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834. Annotated— stock in foreign corporation. Hawley v. Malden (U. S.), 842. Annotated"Public service"—what constitutes "public service" for purposes of taxation. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274. *Annotated*Refund of illegal tax—construction of statute. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227.— effect of voluntary payment. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227.— estoppel of taxpayer to recover tax by listing property for taxation. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227. Annotated— mandamus to compel. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227.— payment under mistake of law. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227.— payment under protest. Malin v. Lamoure County (N. Dak.), 207.— payment under unconstitutional statute. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Board of Supervisors (Iowa), 227.Situs of property for taxation—corporate stock. Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 834.— stock in foreign corporation. Denver v. Hobbs Estate (Colo.), 823.Tax sales—duty of purchaser to accept encumbered title. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.

TAXATION—Continued.

- Tax sale—extinguishment of private easement. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636. Annotated
 ——— foreclosure of tax lien—necessary parties. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.
 ——— notice of redemption—sufficiency. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 783.
 Valuation of property—effect of easement. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze (N. Y.), 636.
See also Licenses.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

- Contract for telephone service—termination of contract. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
 Delay of death message—negligence as question for jury. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521.
 ——— proximate consequence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521.
 Disclosing contents of message—liability of telegraph company. Purdy v. Western Union Tel. Co. (S. Car.), 726. Annotated Duty to serve public without discrimination. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
 Excessive damages—mental anguish—what is excessive verdict. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 521. Annotated Rates for telephone service—legislative regulation. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.
 ——— power of court to regulate. Wolverton v. Mountain States Tel. etc. Co. (Colo.), 776.

TENANTS IN COMMON.

- Right of tenant in common to compensation for sale of common property. Wall v. Focke (Hawaii), 677. Annotated

TENDER.

- Tender of payment of judgment—effect. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527. Annotated ——— sufficiency of evidence. Orr v. Sutton (Minn.), 527.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

See Wills.

THEATERS AND AMUSEMENTS.

- Moving pictures—censorship of moving pictures—validity of state statute. Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Commission (U. S.), 296. Annotated
 ——— lease of moving picture films—rights of parties. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311. Annotated
 ——— statute prohibiting importation of prize fight films—validity. Weber v. Freed (U. S.), 317. Annotated

TIMBER.

See Trees and Timber.

TIME.

See Appeal and Error.

TITLE.

See Courts; Deeds; Eminent Domain; Judicial Sales; Real Property; Taxation.

TORTS.

- Act lawful in itself—motive immaterial. Vitagraph Co. v. Swaab (Pa.), 311; Hutton v. Watters (Tenn.), 433. Annotated Incidental injury to third person—right of action. Nieberg v. Cohen (Vt.), 476.

TOWNS.

See Poor and Poor Laws.

TRANSCRIPT.

See Pleasantry.

TREATIES.

- Construction of treaty. Bondi v. MacKay (Vt.), 180.
 Rights of resident alien—exclusion from privilege of hunting. Bondi v. MacKay (Vt.), 180.

TREES AND TIMBER.

- Expert evidence—correspondence of logs with stumps. State v. Ward (Minn.), 674.
 Logger's lien—by whom and for what labor lien may be claimed. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191. Annotated — persons furnishing supplies—validity of statute giving lien. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Idaho), 191.
 "Timber"—admissibility of evidence of local significance of word. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654. Annotated — meaning of "timber" generally. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654.

TRESPASS.

See Infants.

TRIAL.

- Conduct of judge—statement constituting rebuke to witness—propriety. Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968.
 Confronting witnesses—private examination of witness in criminal case as reversible error. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 Continuance—denial held proper. Bird v. State (Ga.), 205.
 Exclusion of public in criminal case—discretion of court. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
 Findings of fact—general conclusion improper. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321.
 Objections—competency of witness—waiver of objection. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
 — objection to evidence—general objection—evidence partly admissible. State v. Lasecki (Ohio), 1182.
 — objection to evidence—objection too broad. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
 — objection to evidence—time for objecting. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
 Sentence—effect of failure to interrogate accused before sentence. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89. Annotated

See also Admissions and Declarations; Appeal and Error; Dismissal and Non-suit; Misconduct of Counsel; Verdict; Witnesses.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

- Creation of trust—jurisdiction of equity to construe will creating trust. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.
 — will construed as creating trust. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.
 Executions—land held in trust as subject to execution. Johnson v. Whilden (N. Car.), 743.
 Powers of trustee—power of trustee to mortgage trust property. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601. Annotated

ULTRA VIBES.

See Corporations.

UNCERTAINTY.

See Bills and Notes.

UNDERGROUND PIPES.

See Waterworks and Water Companies.

UNDERSTANDING.

See Breach of Promise of Marriage.

UNDERTAKERS.

See Burial Insurance.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

- Gifts causa mortis—sufficiency of evidence of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025.
 Persons engaged to be married—presumption of undue influence. Baber v. Caples (Ore.), 1025. Annotated Wills—sufficiency of evidence to raise issue of undue influence in will contest. Coffey v. Miller (Ky.), 30.

USAGES AND CUSTOMS.

- Local significance of word—admissibility of evidence to show. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654. Annotated

USURY.

- Contract of agent—usury—responsibility of principal. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321. Annotated Proof of usury—clear proof essential. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321.
 What is usurious rate—monthly interest. Brown v. Johnson (Utah), 321.

VACANCY.

See Fire Insurance; Public Officers.

VAGATION.

See Streets and Highways.

VALUE.

See Cooperation.

VARIANCE.

See Criminal Law; Names.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

- Loan of purchase money of land—right of lender to lien on land. Warren Mortgage Co. v. Winters (Kan.), 956.
- Parol reservation of growing crops—validity. Willard v. Higdon (Md.), 339. Annotated
- Restrictive covenants—construction against restriction. Hunt v. Held (Ohio), 1051.
- covenants to use for residence purposes—effect of erection of double house. Hunt v. Held (Ohio), 1051.
- enforcement against subpurchaser—covenantee owning no adjoining land. London County Council v. Allen (Eng.), 932. Annotated
- See also Mortgages.

VERDICT.

- Direction of verdict—insufficiency of evidence. King v. Cooney-Eckstein Co. (Fla.), 163.
- request by both parties—effect. Sims v. Kverett (Ark.), 629.
- Excessive verdict—alienation of affections—what is excessive verdict. Weber v. Weber (Ark.), 743. Annotated
- assault and battery—what is excessive verdict. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248.
- death by wrongful act—what is excessive verdict. Nicoll v. Sweet (Iowa), 861.
- false imprisonment—what is excessive verdict. Weigel v. McCleskey (Ark.), 503. Annotated
- false imprisonment—what is excessive verdict. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Cundiff (Ky.), 513. Annotated
- false imprisonment—what is excessive verdict. Howell v. Wymor (W. Va.), 519. Annotated
- malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. Bursow v. Doerr (Neb.), 248. Annotated
- malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. Seidler v. Burns (Conn.), 266. Annotated
- malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. Price v. Minnesota, etc. R. Co (Minn.), 267. Annotated
- malicious prosecution—what is excessive verdict. McIntosh v. Wales (Wyo.), 273. Annotated
- malpractice of surgeon—what is excessive verdict. Craghead v. McCulloch (Colo.), 1075. Annotated
- malpractice of surgeon—what is excessive verdict. Cranford v. O'Shea (Wash.), 1081. Annotated
- mental anguish in telegraph case—what is excessive verdict. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Blake (Ark.), 581. Annotated
- personal injuries—what is excessive verdict. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135.
- personal injuries—what is excessive verdict. Canadian Pacific Ry. v. Jackson (Can.), 912.
- Voluntary remittitur by plaintiff—effect as prejudicial to defendant. Craghead v. McCulloch (Colo.), 1075.

VIBRATION.

See Explosions and Explosives.

WAIVER.

See Accident Insurance; Appeal and Error; Building Contracts; Creditors' Bills; Criminal Law; Fire Insurance; Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances; Privileged Communications; Witnesses.

WARD.

See Guardians.

WARRANT.

See Arrest.

WARRANTS.See Municipal Corporations.*WASTE.

What constitutes waste—negligent injury by third person: Rogers v. Atlantic, etc. Co. (N. Y.), 877.

WATERWORKS AND WATER COMPANIES.

Underground water pipes—liability for injuries. Charing Cross Electricity Supply Co. v. Hydraulic Supply Co. (Eng.), 1045.

WEEKLY EARNINGS.See Average Weekly Earnings.*WHARVES.

Personal injuries from defect in wharf—liability of carrier of goods to person receiving freight. Miller v. Delaware River Trans. Co. (N. J.), 165. Annotated ——— liability of county. Gregg v. King County (Wash.), 135. Annotated ——— liability of lessee. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160. Annotated ——— liability of municipality. Harris v. Bremerton (Wash.), 160. Annotated ——— liability of owner to employee of third person. Taylor v. Northern Coal, etc. Co. (Wis.), 107. Annotated

WIDOW.See Executors and Administrators.*WILLS.

Construction—bequest of property and "contents" thereof. Creamer v. Harris (Ohio), 1137. Annotated ——— bequest to be divided equally among persons standing in different relationships—division per capita or per stirpes. Perdue v. Starkey's Heirs (Va.), 409. Annotated ——— jurisdiction of equity to construe will creating trust. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.
 ——— rules of construction—intent of testator. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.
 ——— will construed as creating trust. Heiseman v. Lowenstein (Ark.), 601.
 Equitable election—election by husband to take under wife's will—acts constituting elections. Colored Industrial School (Ohio), 1198. Annotated
 Mistake of fact as nullifying operation of will. Dibble v. Currier (Ga.), 1. Annotated
 Parol evidence—admissibility to identify legatee under will. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071.
 Probate or administration fees—validity of statute prescribing. Malin v. Lamoure County (N. Dak.), 207. Annotated Testamentary capacity—admissibility of statement by witness that he had observed no change in testator's condition. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated ——— age and infirmity as affecting testamentary capacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— belief in spiritualism and witchcraft as indicating incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— disease as evidence of incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— excitability as indicating incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— foolish conduct as evidence of incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— insane delusion with respect to relative—effect. Dibble v. Currier (Ga.), 1. Annotated ——— insane delusion with respect to relative—effect. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated ——— insane delusion with respect to relative—effect. Coffey v. Miller (Ky.), 30. Annotated ——— insane delusion with respect to relative—effect. In re Alexander's Estate (Pa.), 33. Annotated ——— instruction as to injustice of will—erroneous instruction. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated ——— instruction basing mental capacity on comprehension of estate "without prompting" Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated ——— instruction not warranted by evidence. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21. Annotated ——— presumption of insanity from insanity of ancestor. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— sufficiency of evidence of incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— test of testamentary capacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 ——— unequal division of property as indicating incapacity. Carnahan v. Hamilton (Ill.), 21.
 Undue influence—sufficiency of evidence to raise issue of undue influence in will contest. Coffey v. Miller (Ky.), 30.
 See also Privileged Communications.

WITCHCRAFT.See Wills.*WITNESSES.

- Competency—husband and wife—competency of wife as witness in prosecution for bigamy. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054. Annotated
- infants—competency of infant as witness. State v. Pitt (N. Car.), 422. Annotated
- juror on former trial—competency as witness. State v. Ward (Mich.), 674. Annotated
- knowledge of facts—hearing letter read. Chalvet v. Huston (D. C.), 1180.
- knowledge of facts—testimony with respect to mortuary tables. Canadian Pacific Ry. v. Jackson (Can.), 912.
- waiver of objection to competency of witness. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- Confronting witnesses—private examination of witness in criminal case as reversible error. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
- Credibility and impeachment—admissibility of stenographic report of previous testimony to impeach witness. Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968.
- falsus in uno—instructions. Hall v. Manufacturers' Coal, etc. Co. (Mo.), 375.
- Cross-examination—cross-examination as to irrelevant matters properly excluded. State v. Von Klein (Ore.), 1054.
- cross-examination of plaintiff—showing animus. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
- Examination—leading questions—discretion of court. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- Expert witnesses—cross-examination—exclusion of questions by court. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- hypothetical questions—basis—facts subsequently supplied. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary (Ala.), 1097.
- Privilege against self-implication—right to claim immunity. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- scope of constitutional provision. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- waiver of privilege as extending to subsequent proceeding. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009. Annotated
- waiver of privilege as subjecting witness to cross-examination. People v. Cassidy (N. Y.), 1009.
- Privileged communications—attorney and client—communication in presence of third person as privileged. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071.
- attorney and client—communication in regard to testamentary matters as privileged. Baumann v. Steingester (N. Y.), 1071. Annotated
- attorney and client—communication to attorney held not privileged. Kaufman v. United States (Fed.), 466.
- physician and patient—waiver by patient. Nolan v. Glynn (Iowa), 559.
- stenographers—confidential communication to stenographer as privileged. Sotham v. Macomber (Mich.), 694. Annotated
- See also Appeal and Error; Trial.

WORDS.

- Local significance of word—admissibility of evidence to show. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654.

WORDS AND PHRASES.

- "Average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase as used in workmen's compensation act. Cue v. Port of London Authority (Eng.), 887.
- "Colored"—who is "colored" person. Tucker v. Blease (S. Car.), 796.
- "Contents"—meaning of expression as used in will in connection with property bequeathed or devised. Creamer v. Harris (Ohio), 1137. Annotated
- "Excise tax"—meaning of term. Albert Pick & Co. v. Jordan (Cal.), 1237.
- "Felonies"—distinction between felony and misdemeanor. Dutton v. State (Md.), 89.
- "Insolvent"—when bank is "insolvent." Griffin v. State (Ga.), 80. Annotated
- "Lying in wait"—what constitutes "lying in wait" within statute relating to homicide. Patterson v. State (Ala.), 968. Annotated
- "Nuisance"—meaning of term. Whittemore v. Baxter Laundry Co. (Mich.), 818.
- "Otherwise"—meaning of term. Townsley v. Hartsfield (Ark.), 643. Annotated
- "Premises"—meaning of term as used in intoxicating liquor statute. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189. Annotated
- "Public service"—what constitutes "public service" for purposes of taxation. Union Ice, etc. Co. v. Ruston (La.), 1274.
- "Tavern"—meaning of term as used in intoxicating liquor statute. Rice v. Board of License Commissioners (R. I.), 1189.
- "Timber"—meaning of term. W. T. Smith Lumber Co. v. Jernigan (Ala.), 654.

See also Constitutional Law; Insurance; Malicious Prosecution; Poor and Poor Laws.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS.

- Admissibility of evidence—declarations of injured workman as to cause of injury. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771. Annotated
- Applicability of rules of judicial procedure. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.
- "Average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cue v. Port of London Authority (Eng.), 887.
- Report by employer to commission—effect as evidence. Reck v. Whittlesberger (Mich.), 771.
- See also Appeal and Error.

INDEX TO NOTES

IN THIS VOLUME.

ABANDONMENT —

See Appeal and Error.

ABORTION —

Woman upon whom abortion is committed as accomplice, 629.

ABUTTING OWNERS —

See Streets and Highways.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE —

Right to recover under accident insurance policy for injuries received while fighting, 579.

Waiver of provision in accident insurance policy limiting time to bring suit thereon, 449.

ACCOMPLICES —

Confession of defendant as sufficient corroboration of accomplice, 570.

Woman upon whom abortion is committed as accomplice, 629.

ACQUIESCENCE —

See Nuisances.

ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS —

Merger or suspension of civil action predicated on commission of felony, 847.

Survival of right of action for conspiracy to restrain trade, 726.

See also Amendments; Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances; Witnesses.

ADJOINING LANDOWNERS —

Termination of right to maintenance of party wall, 374.

ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS —

Admissibility in proceeding under workmen's compensation act of statement by injured employee respecting cause of injury, 775.

Declarations of infant at time of assault or homicide as part of res gestae, 1187.

ADOPTION —

Right of inheritance from adopted child as between natural parents and adoptive parents or their descendants, 757.

Succession to estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child who dies without issue, 762.

ADULTERY —

Separation agreement as bar to action for divorce on ground of adultery, 349.

ADVERTISING —

Municipal regulation of billboards and signs, 491.

Right of tenant of building to use of front wall for advertising purposes, 482.

AFFIANCED PERSONS —

See Undue Influence.

AGENCY —

Act of agent in entering into usurious contract as binding principal, 327.

Nature and extent of liability of del credere agent to principal, 1091.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS —

Action by wife for alienation of affections, 748.

ALLOWANCE —

See Executors and Administrators.

AMENDMENTS —

Right of plaintiff to amend so as to change capacity in which he sues from representative to individual one or vice versa, 401.

Right to amend action by adding new parties plaintiff, 591.

ANCIENT MAPS —

See Maps.

ANCIENT SURVEYS —

See Surveys.

APPEAL AND ERROR —

Effect of abandonment or dismissal of appeal on liability of sureties on appeal bond, 1226.

Payment of fine in criminal case as waiver of right to appeal, 619.

ARMY AND NAVY —

Effect with respect to pension of pensioner becoming inmate of soldiers' home, 854.

ASHES —

Liability of municipality for tort committed in removal of ashes, 242.

ASSAULT —

Declarations of infant at time of assault as part of res gestae, 1187.

Liability as for negligence of person who injures bystander while acting in self-defense, 1150.

Right of person assaulted on his own premises to repel attack without retreating, 918.

ASSESSMENT —

See Taxation.

ATTACHMENT —

Equitable interest in real property as subject to attachment, 786.

Waiver of chattel mortgage lien by attachment, 408.

ATTORNEYS —

Communications between attorney and client in regard to testamentary matters as privileged, 1073.

BAGGAGE —

Duty of carrier to provide safe place for delivery of baggage to passenger, 1213.

BAIL —

Allowance of interest on forfeited bail bond, 114.

BANKRUPTCY —

Criminal liability of corporation for violation of bankruptcy law, 464.

Set-off by bank of deposit against debt due bank by depositor as voidable transfer under bankruptcy law, 990.

Set-off under American bankruptcy acts, 975.

BANKS —

Information acquired by banker as privileged from disclosure, 703.

Set-off by bank of deposit against debt due bank by depositor as voidable transfer under bankruptcy law, 990.

Statement by bank officer to obtain deposit as constituting crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, 1162.

When bank is "insolvent," 85.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS —

Selection by insured of beneficiary not having insurable interest in former's life as against public policy, 587.

BENEFICIARIES —

See Insurance.

BIDS —

Rights of parties with respect to certified check or other deposit made with bid, 427.

BIGAMY —

Husband or wife as competent witness in prosecution for bigamy, 1060.

BILLBOARDS —

Municipal regulation of billboards and signs, 491.

BLASTING —

See Explosions and Explosives.

BONDS —

Right to reform bond by changing name of obligee, 184.

See also Appeal and Error; Bonds.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

Understanding of family or friends of party as evidence of agreement to marry, 564.

BRIBERY —

Inducement to commit bribery with view to prosecution therefore as defense to such prosecution, 730.

BRIDGES —

Power of municipality to compel railroad or street railway to repair bridge within municipal limits, 1171.

BROKERS —

Information acquired by broker as privileged from disclosure, 703.

BUILDING CONTRACTS —

Right of building contractor to rescind contract for failure of owner to make payment, 54.

BUILDINGS —

Liability of owner of building for injury to pedestrian resulting from erection of scaffold for repairing or painting building, 123.

Right of municipality to enjoin violation of ordinance prohibiting erection of wooden building within fire limits, 965.

See also Landlord and Tenant; Nuisances.

BULK SALES —

See Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances.

BURGLARY —

Burglary by opening sufficiently to gain entrance, door or window partly open, 320.

Inducement to commit burglary with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 730.

BURIAL INSURANCE —

Contract for burial as insurance contract, 1016.

BUSINESS —

See Monopolies.

BYSTANDERS —

See Negligence.

CARRIERS OF GOODS —

Liability of corporation to indictment for unjust discrimination in transportation, 464.

Right of person going on wharf to receive freight to recover damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 145.

CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS —

Contributory negligence of passenger in permitting part of his body to protrude from car, 1218.

Duty and liability of carrier to passenger taken sick during transit, 862.

CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS — Continued.

- Duty of carrier to provide safe place for delivery of baggage to passenger, 1213.
- Right of passenger on boat or train for damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 142.
- Right of person meeting passenger to recover damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 145.

CERTIFIED CHECK —
See Bids.

CHARTS —
See Hospitals and Asylums.

CHattel MORTGAGES —
Waiver of chattel mortgage lien by attachment, 408.

CHECKS —
See Bids.

CHoses IN ACTION —
Chose in action as embraced within "contents" or similar expression in will, 1139.

CLAIMS —
See Municipal Corporations.

CLEANING STREETS —
See Streets and Highways.

COLLATERAL ATTACK —
See Eminent Domain.

COLLATERAL SECURITY —
See Stock and Stockholders.

COLORED PERSONS —
Separation of white and colored pupils for purposes of education, 806.

COMMITTEES —
See Public Officers.

COMPENSATION —
See Master and Servant; Streets and Highways; Tenants in Common.

CONCUSSION —
See Explosions and Explosives.

CONFESSIONS —
Confession of defendant as sufficient corroboration of accomplice, 570.
Intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession, 1168.

CONSENT —
See Mechanics' Liens; Nuisances; Physicians and Surgeons.

CONSORTIUM —
See Husband and Wife.

CONSPIRACY —
Liability of corporation to indictment for criminal conspiracy, 462.
Survival of right of action for conspiracy to restrain trade, 726.
Ann. Cas. 1918C.—85.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW —

- Billboards: municipal regulation of billboards and signs, 491.
- Decedents' estates: validity of statute fixing probate or administration fees, 213.
- Eminent domain: validity of statute conferring on public service commission or other body jurisdiction of eminent domain proceedings, 420.
- Evidence: validity of ordinance providing that certain state of facts shall constitute prima facie evidence of violation thereof, 1062.
- Fish and game: validity of statute requiring license to hunt game, 134.
- Foreign corporations: imposition of license tax or fee on foreign corporation, 1248.
- Fuel: power of municipality to engage in business of furnishing fuel to inhabitants, 742.
- Ice: power of municipality to operate plant for purpose of furnishing ice to inhabitants, 1287.
- Innkeepers: validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.
- Moving pictures: statutory regulation of moving pictures, 301.
- Taxation: liability to taxation within state of shares of stock of foreign corporation, 829.
- Witnesses: waiver by witness of constitutional privilege as extending to subsequent trial or proceeding, 1012.

CONSTRUCTION —
See Landlord and Tenant; Wills.

CONTEMPT —
Liability of corporation for criminal contempt, 463.

CONTENTS —
Meaning of "contents" or similar expression as used in will in connection with property bequeathed or devised, 1139.

- CONTRACTS —
- Agency: act of agent in entering into usurious contract as binding principal, 327.
- Bids: rights of parties with respect to certified check or other deposit made with bid, 427.
- Breach: injunction as remedy for breach of express covenant not to engage in same business as covenantee, 187.
- Building contracts: right of building contractor to rescind contract for failure of owner to make payment, 54.
- Corporations: liability of corporation to third parties on contract of its promoters, 105.
- Infants: infancy as defense to action for money loaned, 999.
- power of infant to consent to issuance of liquor license, 497.
- Insurance: contract for burial as insurance contract, 1016.

CONTRACTS — Continued.

Insurance: what is an "insurance company" or "contract of insurance," 1022.
 Municipal corporations: power of municipality to enter into partnership contract for construction of improvement, 909.
 See also Breach of Promise of Marriage; Mechanics' Liens.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE —

Contributory negligence as precluding recovery for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 157.
 Contributory negligence of passenger in permitting part of his body to protrude from car, 1218.

CONVERSION —

Measure of damages for conversion of shares of stock, 641.

CONVICTS —

Right to inflict corporal punishment on convict, 130.

COPYRIGHT —

Application of copyright law to moving pictures, 305.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT —

See Convicts.

CORPORATIONS —

Crimes: criminal liability of corporation for act of misfeasance other than homicide, 459.
 Foreign corporations: imposition of license tax or fee on foreign corporation, 1248.
 Mortgages: right of creditor to object to mortgage of property of corporation made without required consent of stockholders, 1039.
 Promoters: liability of corporation to third parties on contracts of its promoters, 105.
 Stock and stockholders: liability for corporation debts or calls of person who holds stock as collateral security, 567.
 —liability to taxation within state of shares of stock of foreign corporation, 829.
 —measure of damages for conversion of shares of stock, 641.
 See also Insurance.

CORROBORATION —

See Confessions.

COUNTERCLAIM —

See Set-off.

COURTS —

Power of court to exclude person from jury service, 1209.
 See also Discovery; Injunctions.

COVENANTS —

See Contracts; Landlord and Tenant; Vendor and Purchaser.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION —

Action by wife for criminal conversation, 748.

CRIMINAL LAW —

Abortion: woman upon whom abortion is committed as accomplice, 629.
 Assault: declarations of infant at time of assault as part of res gestae, 1187.
 —right of person assaulted on his own premises to repel attack without retreating, 918.
 Bigamy: husband or wife as competent witness in prosecution for bigamy, 1060.
 Burglary: burglary by opening, sufficiently to gain entrance, door or window partly open, 320.
 Confessions: confession of defendant as sufficient corroboration of accomplice, 570.
 —intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession, 1168.
 Corporations: criminal liability of corporation for act of misfeasance other than homicide, 459.
 Embezzlement: restoration of property or settlement or offer to settle with owner as defense to prosecution for embezzlement, 66.
 Entrapment: inducement to commit offense with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 730.
 False pretenses: obtaining loan of money as constituting crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, 1158.
 Homicide: declarations of infant at time of homicide as part of res gestae, 1187.
 —fact that death resulted from supervening cause as defense to charge of homicide, 692.
 —right of jury to convict for lesser degree under indictment or information charging act declared by statute to be murder in first degree, 556.
 —what constitutes "lying in wait" within statute relating to homicide, 969.
 Injunctions: power of equity to enjoin criminal prosecution, 1153.
 —right of state to enjoin private nuisance which is also crime, 455.
 Larceny: restoration of property or settlement or offer to settle with owner as defense to prosecution for larceny, 68.
 Sentence: effect of failure to ask convicted person if he has anything to say before sentence, 95.
 See also Actions and Proceedings; Appeal and Error; Grand Jury.

CROPS —

Validity of parol preservation of crops by vendor of land, 344.

CRUELTY —

Separation agreement as bar to action for divorce on ground of cruelty, 351.

CURTESY —

Act of husband as tenant by curtesy as constituting election to take under wife's will, 1205.

CUSTOMS —

See Usages and Customs.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS —

Right of customs officer to damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 132.

DAMAGES —

Alienation of affections: damages recoverable in action by wife for alienation of affections, 752.

Building contracts: prospective profits as damages on rescission of building contract for failure of owner to make payment, 59.

Criminal conversation: damages recoverable in action by wife for criminal conversation, 752.

Eminent domain: value of fixtures as element of damages sustained by appropriation of property in eminent domain proceeding, 780.

Excessive or inadequate damages: what is excessive or inadequate verdict in action against physician for malpractice, 1078.
—what is excessive or inadequate verdict in action for false imprisonment, 505.

—what is excessive or inadequate verdict in action for malicious prosecution, 250.
—what is excessive verdict for mental anguish in telegraph case, 524.

Impotency: necessity that impotency be pleaded specially in action for personal injuries, 383.

Liquidated damages: deposit made with bid as liquidated damages, 432.

—stipulation for liquidated damages as barring injunction to restrain breach of covenant not to engage in same business, 191.

Stock: measure of damages for conversion of shares of stock, 641.

See also Life Estates.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT —

Admissibility in action for death by wrongful act of evidence of domestic relations of deceased, 671.

Commencement of running of statute of limitations against action for death by wrongful act, 713.

Liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.

Right of parent to recover for death of illegitimate child, 720.

Right to amend action for death by wrongful act by adding new parties plaintiff, 596.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR —

See Corporations, Suretyship,

DEEDS —

Deed as embraced within "contents" or similar expression in will, 1130.

Priority as between purchase money mortgage and deed, 946.

DEGREES —

See Homicide.

DEL CREDERE AGENT —

See Agency.

DEPOSIT —

See Bids.

DEPOSITS —

See Banks.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION —

Right of inheritance from adopted child as between natural parents and adoptive parents or their descendants, 757.

Succession to estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child who dies without issue, 762.

DESERTION —

Separation agreement as bar to action for divorce on ground of desertion, 354.

DIARIES —

Private diary as evidence, 711.

DISCOVERY —

Transcript of court proceedings as privileged from inspection, 876.

DISEASE —

Death resulting from disease caused by wound as affecting liability for homicide, 693.

DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT —

See Appeal and Error.

DIVORCE —

Separation agreement as bar to action for divorce, 347.

DOCKS —

See Wharves.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS —

See Death by Wrongful Act.

DOORS —

See Burglary.

DOWER —

Priority as between purchase money mortgage and dower rights, 946.

DRUNKENNESS —

Intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession, 1168.

DYNAMITE —

Storage of dynamite as nuisance, 820.

EASEMENTS —

Sale of land for taxes as extinguishing private easement, 638.

EDUCATION —

See Schools.

EMBEZZLEMENT —

Restoration of property or settlement or offer to settle with owner as defense to prosecution for embezzlement, 66.

EMINENT DOMAIN —

Collateral attack on eminent domain proceeding, 40.

Persons entitled to compensation for vacation of street, 238.

Validity of statute conferring on public service commission or other body jurisdiction of eminent domain proceedings, 420.

Value of fixtures as element of damages sustained by appropriation of property in eminent domain proceeding, 780.

EQUITABLE ELECTION —

See Wills.

EQUITABLE INTEREST —

See Attachment.

EQUITY —

See Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances; Injunctions.

ESTOPPEL —

Acquiescence in or consent to erection of structure as precluding objection thereto as nuisance, 1235.

Estoppel of taxpayer returning property for taxation to dispute assessment based on return, 230.

Estoppel of taxpayer to question validity of tax, 225.

EVIDENCE —

Admissions and declarations: admissibility in proceeding under workmen's compensation act of statement by injured employee respecting cause of injury, 775.

—declarations of infant at time of assault or homicide as part of res gestae, 1187.

Alienation of affections: evidence in action by wife for alienation of affections, 751.

Breach of promise of marriage: understanding of family or friends of party as evidence of agreement to marry, 564.

Confessions: confession of defendant as sufficient corroboration of accomplice, 570.

—intoxication as affecting admissibility of confession, 1168.

Criminal conversation: evidence in action by wife for criminal conversation, 751.

Death by wrongful act: admissibility in action for death by wrongful act of evidence of domestic relations of deceased, 671.

Diaries: private diary as evidence, 717.

Hospital charts: hospital chart as evidence, 78.

Maps: admissibility in evidence of ancient map, 176.

Presumptions: presumption of undue influence arising from relation of man and woman engaged to be married, 1031.

Prima facie evidence: validity of ordinance providing that certain state of facts shall constitute prima facie evidence of violation thereof, 1062.

Surveys: admissibility in evidence of ancient survey, 176.

EVIDENCE — Continued.

Usages and customs: admissibility of evidence of peculiar signification of word in locality where instrument was executed, 655.

EXAMINATION OF TITLE —

See Judicial Sales.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS —

Act of husband as executor as constituting election to take under wife's will, 1207.

Effect of voluntary separation on right to widow's allowance, 866.

Validity of statute fixing administration fees, 213.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES —

Inducement to violate statute regulating manufacture and use of explosives with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 733.

Injury to property by concussion or vibration resulting from blasting, 1176.

Storage of gasoline or other explosive as nuisance, 820.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT —

What is excessive or inadequate verdict in action for false imprisonment, 505.

FALSE PRETENSES —

Criminal liability of corporation for obtaining money by false pretenses, 465.

Inducement to commit crime of obtaining goods by false pretenses with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 731.

Obtaining loan of money as constituting crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, 1158.

FEES —

See Taxation.

FELONIES —

See Actions and Proceedings.

FIDELITY INSURANCE —

Recovery of premium paid for fidelity insurance, 1222.

FIDUCIARIES —

Information acquired in fiduciary relation as privileged from disclosure, 701.

FIGHTING —

See Accident Insurance.

FINES AND PENALTIES —

See Appeal and Error.

FIRE INSURANCE —

Revival of fire insurance policy by occupancy after vacancy, 770.

Validity of insurance policy on property illegally kept or used, 1070.

FIRES —

Right of municipality to enjoin violation of ordinance prohibiting erection of wooden building within fire limits, 965.
Validity of statute or ordinance requiring hotels and the like to provide protection against fire, 294.

FISH AND GAME —

Criminal liability of corporation for fishing, 465.
Validity of statute requiring license to hunt game, 134.

FIXTURES —

Value of fixtures as element of damages sustained by appropriation of property in eminent domain proceeding, 780.

FORCE —

Validity of personal service of process procured by fraud or force, 612.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS —

Imposition of license tax or fee on foreign corporation, 1248.
Liability to taxation within state of shares of stock of foreign corporation, 829.

FORFEITURES —

See Bail; Fire Insurance.

FOOD AND DRUGS —

Criminal liability of corporation for violating food law, 466.
Inducement to commit offense under pure food and drugs act with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 734.

FRAUD —

Right of action for fraud in inducing performance of personal services without intent to pay therefor, 172.
Validity of personal service of process procured by fraud or force, 612.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF —

Validity of parol preservation of crops by vendor of land, 344.

FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES —

Remedies of creditor for violation of bulk sales law, 928.

FRIENDSHIP —

Communication based on friendship as privileged from disclosure, 699.

FUEL —

See Municipal Corporations.

GAME —

See Fish and Game.

GARBAGE —

Liability of municipality for tort committed in removal of garbage, 242.

GAS —

Storage of gas as nuisance, 820.

GASOLINE —

Storage of gasoline as nuisance, 820.

GIFTS —

Validity of gift of mortgage inter vivos without writing, 814.

GRAND JURY —

Power of court to reassemble discharged grand jury, 207.

GUARDIANS —

Power of guardian to sell personal property of ward, 334.

HOMESTEAD —

Priority as between purchase money mortgage and claim of homestead, 949.

HOMICIDE —

Declarations of infant at time of homicide as part of res gestae, 1187.
Fact that death resulted from supervening cause as defense to charge of homicide, 692.
Right of jury to convict for lesser degree under indictment or information charging act declared by statute to be murder in first degree, 556.
What constitutes "lying in wait" within statute relating to homicide, 969.

HOSPITALS AND ASYLUMS —

Hospital chart as evidence, 78.

HOTELS —

Validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.

HUSBAND AND WIFE —

Alienation of affections: action by wife for alienation of affections, 748.
Consortium: right of husband to recover for loss of consortium in action for personal injuries to wife where statute gives wife right of action for such injuries, 886.
Criminal conversation: action by wife for criminal conversation, 748.
Equitable election: sufficiency of acts to constitute election by husband to take under wife's will, 1204.
Imprisonment: right of wife to recover damages for imprisonment of husband, 481.
Separation: effect of voluntary separation on right to widow's allowance, 866.
—separation agreement, as bar to action for divorce, 347.
Testamentary capacity: insane delusion with respect to fidelity of spouse as affecting testamentary capacity, 16.
Witnesses: husband or wife as competent witness in prosecution for bigamy, 1060.

ICE —

Power of municipality to operate plant for purpose of furnishing ice to inhabitants, 1287.

ILLEGITIMACY —

Right of parent to recover for death of illegitimate child, 720.

IMMIGRATION —

Criminal liability of corporation for bringing labor into United States, 463.
Inducement to commit immigration offense with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 732.

IMPOTENCY.

Necessity that impotency be pleaded specially in action for personal injuries, 383.

IMPRISONMENT —

See Husband and Wife.

IMPROVEMENTS —

See Mechanics' Liens; Municipal Corporations.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS —

Liability of owner of building for injury to pedestrian resulting from negligence of independent contractor in erection of scaffold, 123.

INDUCEMENT —

See Criminal Law.

INFANTS —

Adoption: right of inheritance from adopted child as between natural parents and adoptive parents or their descendants, 757.
—succession to estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child who dies without issue, 762.
Contracts: infancy as defense to action for money loaned, 999.
—power of infant to consent to issuance of liquor license, 497.
Declarations: declarations of infant at time of assault or homicide as part of res gestae, 1187.
Injuries: infancy or other disability of claimant as suspending limitation of time for filing claim against municipality, 1042.
—liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.

INHERITANCE —

See Descent and Distribution; Life Estates.

INJUNCTIONS —

Injunction as remedy for breach of express covenant not to engage in same business as covenantee, 187.
Power of equity to enjoin criminal prosecution, 1153.
Right of municipality to enjoin violation of municipal ordinance, 963.
Right of state to enjoin private nuisance which is also crime, 455.

INNKEEPERS —

Validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.

INSANITY —

Insane delusion with respect to relative as affecting testamentary capacity, 4.

INSOLVENCY —

When bank is "insolvent," 85.

INSURABLE INTEREST —

See Insurance.

INSURANCE —

Accident insurance: right to recover under accident insurance policy for injuries received while fighting, 579.
—waiver of provision in accident insurance policy limiting time to bring suit thereon, 449.
Benefit insurance: selection by insured of beneficiary not having insurable interest in former's life as against public policy, 587.
Burial insurance: contract for burial as insurance contract, 1016.
Definitions: what is an "insurance company" or "contract of insurance," 1022.
Fidelity insurance: recovery of premium paid for fidelity insurance, 1222.
Fire insurance: revival of fire insurance policy by occupancy after vacancy, 770.
—validity of insurance policy on property illegally kept or used, 1070.
Life insurance: selection by insured of beneficiary not having insurable interest in former's life as against public policy, 587.

INTEREST —

Allowance of interest on forfeited bail bond, 114.
Interest on city warrants, 576.
Right to interest on deposit returned to bidder, 433.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE —

Imposition of license tax or fee on foreign corporation, 1248.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS —

Criminal liability of corporation for violation of liquor law, 465.
Inducement to violate liquor law with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 732.
Power of infant to consent to issuance of liquor license, 497.
What is included in term "premises" in statute relating to sale of intoxicating liquor, 1193.

INTOXICATION —

See Drunkenness.

JUDGMENTS —

Effect of tender of amount due on judgment, 536.
Priority as between purchase money mortgage and judgment, 949.

JUDGMENTS — Continued.

When statute of limitations begins to run against action on judgment, 625.

JUDICIAL SALES —

Right of purchaser at judicial sale to reasonable time to examine title, 764.

JURY —

Competency as witness of juror on former trial, 676.

Power of court to exclude person from jury service, 1209.

See also Grand Jury.

KEROSENE —

Storage of kerosene as nuisance, 820.

LABOR LAWS —

Criminal liability of corporation for violation of labor law, 465.

LACHES —

Laches as barring injunction to restrain breach of covenant not to engage in same business, 190.

LANDLORD AND TENANT —

Advertising: right of tenant of building to use of front wall for advertising purposes, 482.

Corporations: criminal liability of corporation as tenant for wilful destruction of premises, 465.

Employee as tenant: person occupying premises of employer as part of compensation as tenant of owner, 1111.

Fixtures: value of fixtures attached by tenant as element of damages sustained by appropriation of property in eminent domain proceeding, 782.

Improvements: mechanic's lien on realty for improvements made by lessee with consent of owner, 1133.

Renewal of lease: construction of covenant in lease for renewal as covenant for perpetual renewal, 1006.

Wharves: liability of lessor or lessee for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 154.

LARCENY —

Inducement to commit larceny with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 732.

Liability of corporation to indictment for larceny, 463.

Restoration of property or settlement or offer to settle with owner as defense to prosecution for larceny, 68.

LEASES —

See Landlord and Tenant; Moving Pictures.

LIBEL AND SLANDER —

Liability of corporation to indictment for criminal libel, 463.

LICENSE —

Right of licensee to recover damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 149.

LICENSES —

Imposition of license tax or fee on foreign corporation, 1248.

Licensing motion picture exhibitions, 303.

Validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.

Validity of statute requiring license to hunt game, 134.

See also Intoxicating Liquors.

LIENS —

Priority as between purchase-money mortgage and other lien or claim, 945.

See also Chattel Mortgages; Logs and Lumber.

LIFE ESTATES —

Right of life tenant to recover damages for injury both to life estate and inheritance, 881.

LIFE INSURANCE —

Selection by insured of beneficiary not having insurable interest in former's life as against public policy, 587.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS —

Commencement of running of statute of limitations against action for death by wrongful act, 713.

Infancy or other disability of claimant as suspending limitation of time for filing claim against municipality, 1042.

Limitation against action by wife for alienation of affections or criminal conversation, 743.

Waiver of provision in accident insurance policy limiting time to bring suit thereon, 449.

When statute of limitations begins to run against action on judgment, 625.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES —

See Damages.

LISTING PROPERTY —

See Taxation.

LOANS —

See False Pretenses; Infants.

LOCAL SIGNIFICANCE —

See Usages and Customs.

LODGING HOUSES —

Validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.

LOGS AND LUMBER —

By whom and for what labor or services logger's lien may be claimed, 198.

LYING IN WAIT —

What constitutes "lying in wait" within statute relating to homicide, 969.

MAJORITY —

See Partnership.

MALICE —

Act lawful in itself not rendered unlawful by malicious motive, 438.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION —

What is excessive or inadequate verdict in action for malicious prosecution, 250.

MALPRACTICE —

See Physicians and Surgeons.

MAPS —

Admissibility in evidence of ancient map, 176.

MARRIAGE —

See Breach of Promise of Marriage; Undue Influence.

MASTER AND SERVANT —

Admissibility in proceeding under workmen's compensation act of statement by injured employee respecting cause of injury, 775.

Information acquired in employment as privileged from disclosure, 701.

Injunction as remedy for breach of covenant by employee not to engage in same business, 187.

Person occupying premises of employer as part of compensation as tenant of owner, 1111.

Right of employee of third person to recover damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 146.

MECHANICS' LIENS —

Mechanic's lien on realty for improvements made with consent but not at expense of owner, 1133.

Priority as between purchase money mortgage and mechanics' lien, 951.

MENTAL ANGUISH —

See Damages.

MERGER —

See Actions and Proceedings.

MISFEASANCE —

See Corporations.

MONEY —

Money as embraced within "contents" or similar expression in will, 1139.

See also False Pretenses.

MONOPOLIES —

Injunction as remedy for breach of express covenant not to engage in same business as covenantee, 187.

Survival of right of action for conspiracy to restrain trade, 726.

MORTGAGES —

Mechanic's lien on realty for improvements made by mortgagor, 1135.

Power of trustee to mortgage trust property, 606.

Priority as between purchase-money mortgage and other lien or claim, 945.

MORTGAGES — Continued.

Right of creditor to object to mortgage of property of corporation made without required consent of stockholders, 1039.

Validity of gift of mortgage inter vivos without writing, 814.

MOTIVE —

See Malice.

MOVING PICTURES —

Construction of lease or sale of moving picture films, 307.

Construction of theater lease in connection with exhibition of moving pictures, 307.

English cinematograph Act, 309.

Statutory regulation of moving pictures, 301.

Unlawful use of portrait or name in moving picture, 308.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS —

Billboards and signs: municipal regulation of billboards and signs, 401.

Claims: infancy or other disability of claimant as suspending limitation of time for filing claim against municipality, 1042.

Fuel: power of municipality to engage in business of furnishing fuel to inhabitants, 742.

Hotels, etc.: validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.

Ice: power of municipality to operate plant for purpose of furnishing ice to inhabitants, 1287.

Improvement contracts: power of municipality to enter into partnership contract for construction of improvement, 909.

Officers: power of body having authority to remove public officer to appoint committee to conduct hearing, 1273.

Ordinances: right of municipality to enjoin violation of municipal ordinance, 963.

—validity of ordinance providing that certain state of facts shall constitute prima facie evidence of violation thereof, 1062.

Railroads and street railways: power of municipality to compel railroad or street railway to repair bridge within municipal limits, 1171.

Streets: liability of municipality for tort committed in cleaning streets or in removal of garbage, ashes, or other refuse, 242.

Warrants: interest on city warrants, 576.

MURDER —

See Homicide.

NAME —

See Bonds.

NAPHTHA —

Storage of naphtha as nuisance, 820.

NEGLIGENCE —

- Assault: liability as for negligence of person who injures bystander while acting in self-defense, 1150.
- Carriers of passengers: contributory negligence of passenger in permitting part of his body to protrude from car, 1218.
- duty and liability of carrier to passengers taken sick during transit, 862.
- duty of carrier to provide safe place for delivery of baggage to passenger, 1213.
- Contributory negligence: contributory negligence as precluding recovery for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 157.
- Death by wrongful act: admissibility in action for death by wrongful act of evidence of domestic relations of deceased, 671.
- commencement of running of statute of limitations against action for death by wrongful act, 713.
- right of parent to recover for death of illegitimate child, 720.
- Explosions and explosives: injury to property by concussion or vibration resulting from blasting, 1176.
- Husband and wife: right of husband to recover for loss of consortium in action for personal injuries to wife where statute gives wife right of action for such injuries, 886.
- Life estates: right of life tenant to recover damages for injury both to life estate and inheritance, 881.
- Owners of premises: liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.
- Physicians and surgeons: consent as affecting right to perform surgical operation, 1105.
- Streets and highways: liability of municipality for tort committed in cleaning streets or in removal of garbage, ashes, or other refuse, 242.
- liability of owner of building for injury to pedestrian resulting from erection of scaffold for repairing or painting building, 123.
- Telegraphs and telephones: liability of telegraph company for disclosure of contents of message, 727.
- Waterworks and water companies: liability for injuries caused by underground water pipes, 1050.
- Wharves: injuries to persons on or about wharves, docks, or piers, 139.
- Workmen's compensation acts: admissibility in proceeding under workmen's compensation act of statement by injured employee respecting cause of injury, 775.

NEGROES —

- Separation of white and colored pupils for purposes of education, 806.

NEWSPAPERS —

- Communication to newspaper reporter as privileged from disclosure, 705.

NITROGLYCERINE —

- Storage of nitroglycerine as nuisance, 820.

NOTICE —

- See Suretyship.

NUISANCES —

- Acquiescence in or consent to erection of structure as precluding objection thereto as nuisance, 1235.
- Liability of corporation to indictment for committing nuisance, 463.
- Right of state to enjoin private nuisance which is also crime, 455.
- Storage of gasoline or other explosive as nuisance, 820.

OBLIGEE —

- See Bonds.

OBSCENITY —

- Criminal liability of corporation for mailing obscene matter, 465.
- Inducement to commit offense of selling obscene matter with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 734.

OCCUPANCY —

- See Fire Insurance.

OFFER OF SETTLEMENT —

- See Embezzlement; Larceny.

OFFICERS —

- See Public Officers.

OIL —

- Storage of oil as nuisance, 820.

OPERATIONS —

- See Physicians and Surgeons.

ORDINANCES —

- See Municipal Corporations.

OTHERWISE —

- Legal meaning of "otherwise," 644.

OWNERS OF PREMISES —

- Liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.
- Liability of owner of building for injury to pedestrian resulting from erection of scaffold for repairing or painting building, 123.

PARENT AND CHILD —

- Consent of parent as necessary to operation on child, 1107.
- Insane delusion with respect to paternity of child as affecting testamentary capacity, 18.
- Right of inheritance from adopted child as between natural parents and adoptive parents or their descendants, 757.
- Right of parent to recover for death of illegitimate child, 720.
- Succession to estate inherited from foster parent by adopted child who dies without issue, 702.

PAROL GIFTS —

- See Gifts.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS —

Parties to action by wife for alienation of affections or criminal conversion, 750.
 Right of plaintiff to amend so as to change capacity in which he sues from representative to individual one or vice versa, 401.
 Right to amend action by adding new parties plaintiff, 591.

PARTNERSHIP —

Injunction as remedy for breach of covenant in partnership agreement not to engage in same business, 189.
 Power of majority of partners to bind firm, 110.
 Power of municipality to enter into partnership contract for construction of improvement, 909.

PARTY WALLS —

Termination of right to maintenance of party wall, 374.

PASSENGERS —

See Carriers of Passengers.

PAUPERS —

See Poor and Poor Laws.

PAYMENT —

See Appeal and Error; Building Contracts; Tender.

PEDESTRIANS —

See Streets and Highways.

PENALTIES —

See Bail.

PENSIONS —

Effect with respect to pension of pensioner becoming inmate of soldiers' home, 854.

PER CAPITA —

See Wills.

PERSON —

Corporation as "person" within penal statute, 462.

PERSONAL PROPERTY —

See Guardians.

PERSONAL SERVICE —

See Process.

PERSONAL SERVICES —

See Fraud.

PER STIRPES —

See Wills.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS —

Consent as affecting right to perform surgical operation, 1105.
 Criminal liability of corporation for advertising practice of medicine, 465.
 Inducement to violate law regulating practice of medicine with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 733.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — Continued.

What is excessive or inadequate verdict in action against physician for malpractice, 1078.

PIERS —

See Wharves.

PIPES —

See Waterworks and Water Companies.

PLEADING —

Necessity that impotency be pleaded specially in action for personal injuries, 383.
 Right of plaintiff to amend so as to change capacity in which he sues from representative to individual one or vice versa, 401.
 Right to amend action by adding new parties plaintiff, 591.

PLEDGE —

See Stock and Stockholders.

PONDS —

Liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.

POOLS —

Liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.

POOR AND POOR LAWS —

Who is pauper or poor person within poor laws, 389.

POST OFFICE —

Inducement to violate postal law with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 733.

POWDER —

Storage of powder as nuisance, 820.

PREMISES —

What is included in term "premises" as used with respect to land, 1192.

PREMIUMS —

See Fidelity Insurance.

PRESUMPTIONS —

Presumption of undue influence arising from relation of man and woman engaged to be married, 1031.

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE —

See Evidence.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT —

See Agency.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY —

See Suretyship.

PRISONS AND PRISONERS —

See Convicts.

PRIVACY, RIGHT OF —

Unlawful use of portrait or name in moving picture, 308.

PRIVATE DIARIES —

See Diaries.

PRIVATE NUISANCES —

See Nuisances.

PRIVILEGE —

See Discovery; Witnesses.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS —

Communications between attorney and client in regard to testamentary matters as privileged, 1073.

Information communicated in contract, fiduciary or similar relation as privileged from disclosure, 698.

PROBATE —

See Wills.

PROCESS —

Validity of personal service of process procured by fraud or force, 612.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS —

See Discovery.

PROFITS —

Prospective profits as damages on rescission of building contract for failure of owner to make payment, 59.

PROMOTERS —

See Corporations.

PROSTITUTION —

Inducement to provide inmate for house of prostitution with view to prosecution therefor as defense to such prosecution, 734.

PUBLIC CONTRACTS —

Power of municipality to enter into partnership contract for construction of improvement, 909.

Rights of parties with respect to certified check or other deposit made with bid, 427.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS —

See Municipal Corporations.

PUBLIC LANDS —

Criminal liability of corporation for inclosing public domain, 465.

PUBLIC OFFICERS —

Power of body having authority to remove public officer to appoint committee to conduct hearing, 1273.

PUBLIC POLIOY —

See Insurance.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS —

Validity of statute conferring on public service commission or other body jurisdiction of eminent domain proceedings, 420.

PUBLIC WHARVES —

Liability for injuries sustained on defective public wharf, 150.

PUNISHMENT —

See Convicts.

PUPILS —

See Schools.

PURCHASE-MONEY MORTGAGES —

See Mortgages.

RAILROADS —

Power of municipality to compel railroad to repair bridge within municipal limits, 1171.

REAL PROPERTY —

See Attachment.

RELATIVES —

See Wills.

REMAINDERS —

Right of life tenant to recover damages for injury both to life estate and inheritance, 881.

REMEDIES —

See Fraudulent Sales and Conveyances.

REMOVAL —

See Public Officers.

RENEWAL —

See Landlord and Tenant.

REPORTERS —

See Newspapers.

RESCISSION, CANCELLATION, AND REFORMATION —

Right of building contractor to rescind contract for failure of owner to make payment, 54.

Right to reform bond by changing name of obligee, 184.

RES GESTAE —

See Evidence.

RESTORATION OF PROPERTY —

See Embezzlement.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE —

See Monopolies.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS —

See Vendor and Purchaser.

RETREAT —

See Self-Defense.

RIGHT OF PRIVACY —

See Privacy, Right of.

ROOMING HOUSES —

Validity of statute or ordinance licensing or regulating hotels, lodging or rooming houses, or the like, 290.

SALES —

See Guardians; Tenants in Common.

SCAFFOLD —

See Owners of Premises.

SCHOOLS —

Power of school authorities to permit use of school building for other than religious or public school purposes, 485.

Separation of white and colored pupils for purposes of education, 806.

SECRECY —

Communication based on promise of secrecy as privileged from disclosure, 699.

SELF-CRIMINATION —

See Witnesses.

SELF-DEFENSE —

Liability as for negligence of person who injures bystander while acting in self-defense, 1150.

Right of person assaulted on his own premises to repel attack without retreating, 918.

SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT —

Effect of failure to ask convicted person if he has anything to say before sentence, 95.

Punishment of corporation for criminal acts, 465.

See also Appeal and Error; Convicts.

SEPARATION —

See Husband and Wife.

SEPARATION OF RACES —

See Schools.

SERVICE OF PROCESS —

See Process.

SET-OFF —

Set-off by bank of deposit against debt due bank by depositor as voidable transfer under bankruptcy law, 990.

Set-off under American bankruptcy acts, 975.

SETTLEMENT —

See Embezzlement, Larceny.

SHIPS AND SHIPPING —

Right of person having business with officer of vessel to recover damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 145.

SICK PASSENGERS —

See Passengers.

SIDE TRACKS —

See Street Railways.

SIGNS —

Municipal regulation of billboards and signs, 491.

SOLDIERS' HOMES —

See Army and Navy.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS —

See Frauds, Statute of.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS —

See Limitation of Actions.

STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS —

Liability for corporation debts or calls of person who holds stock as collateral security, 567.

Liability to taxation within state of shares of stock of foreign corporation, 829.

Measure of damages for conversion of shares of stock, 641.

Right of creditor to object to mortgage of property of corporation made without required consent of stockholders, 1039.

STREET RAILWAYS —

Power of municipality to compel street railway to repair bridge within municipal limits, 1171.

Power of street railway to construct side tracks, 793.

STREETS AND HIGHWAYS —

Criminal liability of corporation for obstruction of public road, 463.

Liability of municipality for tort committed in cleaning streets or in removal of garbage, ashes, or other refuse, 242.

Liability of owner of building for injury to pedestrian resulting from erection of scaffold for repairing or painting building, 123.

Persons entitled to compensation for vacation of street, 238.

See also Street Railways.

SUCCESSION —

See Descent and Distribution.

SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS —

Application of Sunday laws to moving picture shows, 304.

Criminal liability of corporation for Sabbath breaking, 465.

SUPERVENING CAUSE —

See Homicide.

SURETYSHIP —

Effect of abandonment or dismissal of appeal on liability of sureties on appeal bond, 1226.

Sufficiency as to form of notice to creditor to sue principal in order to discharge surety, 632.

SURGEONS —

See Physicians and Surgeons.

SURVEYS —

Admissibility in evidence of ancient survey, 176.

SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS —

See Actions and Proceedings.

SUSPENSION —

See Actions and Proceedings.

TAXATION —

- Decedents' estates: validity of statute fixing probate or administration fees, 213.
- Estoppel: estoppel of taxpayer returning property for taxation to dispute assessment based on return, 230.
- estoppel of taxpayer to question validity of tax, 22.
- Foreign corporations: liability to taxation within state of shares of stock of foreign corporation, 829.
- Priorities: priority as between purchase money mortgage and tax assessment, 955.
- Tax sales: sale of land for taxes as extinguishing private easement, 639.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES —

- Liability of telegraph company for disclosure of contents of message, 727.
- Telegram as privileged communication, 704.
- What is excessive verdict for mental anguish in telegraph case, 524.

TENANT BY CURTESY —

- See Curtesy.

TENANTS IN COMMON —

- Right of tenant in common to compensation for services in selling common property, 680.

TENDER —

- Effect of tender of amount due on judgment, 536.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY —

- See Wills.

THEATERS AND AMUSEMENTS —

- Moving pictures, 301.

TITLE —

- See Judicial Sales.

TORTS —

- Act lawful in itself not rendered unlawful by malicious motive, 438.

TRANSCRIPT —

- See Discovery.

TREES AND TIMBER —

- By whom and for what labor or services logger's lien may be claimed, 198.

TRESPASS —

- Right of trespasser to recover damages for injuries sustained on defective wharf, 150.
- See also Infants.

TRIAL —

- Effect of failure to ask convicted person if he has anything to say before sentence, 95.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES —

- Power of trustee to mortgage trust property, 606.

TURNPIKES AND TOLL ROADS —

- Criminal liability of corporation for collecting excessive toll, 465.

UNDERGROUND PIPES —

- See Waterworks and Water Companies.

UNDERSTANDING —

- See Breach of Promise of Marriage.

UNDERTAKERS —

- See Burial Insurance.

UNDUE INFLUENCE —

- Presumption of undue influence arising from relation of man and woman engaged to be married, 1031.

USAGES AND CUSTOMS —

- Admissibility of evidence of peculiar signification of word in locality where instrument was executed, 655.

USURY —

- Act of agent in entering into usurious contract as binding principal, 327.
- Criminal liability of corporation for receiving illegal interest, 465.

VACANCY —

- See Fire Insurance.

VACATION —

- See Streets and Highways.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER —

- Enforcement in equity against subpurchaser of restrictive covenant not running with lands, where covenantee has no interest in adjoining land, 942.
- Mechanic's lien on realty for improvements made by purchaser under contract of sale with consent of owner, 1135.
- Validity of parol preservation of crops by vendor of land, 344.

VERDICT —

- What is excessive or inadequate verdict in action against physician for malpractice, 1078.
- What is excessive or inadequate verdict in action for false imprisonment, 505.
- What is excessive or inadequate verdict in action for malicious prosecution, 250.
- What is excessive verdict for mental anguish in telegraph case, 524.

VIBRATION —

- See Explosions and Explosives.

WAIVER —

- See Accident Insurance; Appeal and Error; Witnesses.

WARD —

- See Guardians.

WARRANTS —

- See Municipal Corporations.

WATERS AND WATERCOURSES —

- Criminal liability of corporation for obstruction of public waterway, 463.

WATERWORKS AND WATER COMPANIES —

Liability for injuries caused by underground water pipes, 1050.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES —

Criminal liability of corporation for use of false weights and measures, 465.

WELLS —

Liability of landowner for injury to trespassing child, on account of unguarded pond, pool, well, etc., 1085.

WHARVES —

Injuries to persons on or about wharves, docks, or piers, 139.

WIDOW —

See Executors and Administrators.

WILLS —

Construction: bequest to be divided equally among persons standing in different relationships to testator as requiring division per capita or per stirpes, 411.

—meaning of "contents" or similar expression as used in will in connection with property bequeathed or devised, 1139.

—what is included in term "premises" as used in will, 119.

Equitable election: sufficiency of acts to constitute election by husband to take under wife's will, 1204.

Probate: validity of statute fixing probate fees, 213.

Testamentary capacity: insane delusion with respect to relative as affecting testamentary capacity, 4.

See also Privileged Communications.

WINDOWS —

See Burglary.

WITNESSES —

Communications between attorney and client in regard to testamentary matters as privileged, 1073.

Competency as witness of juror on former trial, 676.

Husband or wife as competent witness in prosecution for bigamy, 1060.

Information communicated in contract, fiduciary or similar relation as privileged from disclosure, 698.

Waiver by witness of constitutional privilege as extending to subsequent trial or proceeding, 1012.

WORDS —

Admissibility of evidence of peculiar signification of word in locality where instrument was executed, 655.

WORDS AND PHRASES —

"Contents:" meaning of "contents" or similar expression as used in will in connection with property bequeathed or devised, 1139.

"Insolvent:" when bank is "insolvent," 85.

"Lying in wait:" what constitutes "lying in wait" within statute relating to homicide, 860.

"Otherwise:" legal meaning of "otherwise," 644.

"Premises:" what is included in term "premises" as used with respect to land, 1192.

See also Insurance; Poor and Poor Laws.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS.

Admissibility in proceeding under workmen's compensation act of statement by injured employee respecting cause of injury, 775.

